Child's family awarded $67.6 million

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas County jury has awarded $67.5 million to the family of a 10-year-old girl whose leg was amputated after crucial MRI results went missing for more than a day at Children's Medical Center.

The girl was five when the family's burro used its teeth to grab her by the abdomen and pick her up, causing internal injuries.

Doctors removed part of her intestines but did not discover a blood clot that cut off circulation to her left leg because the test results were misplaced, her family's attorney said.

Fred Evans and his family accused the Dallas hospital of negligence, arguing the amputation would not have been necessary had doctors been able to review the results of the MRI sooner.

Maureen Murry, an attorney for the hospital, declined comment. The hospital's only comment came through a statement issued Saturday.

"Children's continues to believe it acted appropriately," the statement says in part.

The hospital plans to challenge the ruling, which included $50 million in punitive damages, according to the statement.

An attorney for the girl's family told The Dallas Morning News that his clients bear no ill will against the hospital.

"Children's is a great place, but it is flawed in some areas," Keith Lemons said. The girl's relatives "want to make it a better place. They don't want to tear it down."

The Evans family declined to be interviewed. Lemons said the family lives in a suburb north of Dallas.

After the burro attack in May 1993, the girl was flown to Parkland Memorial Hospital where doctors removed part of her intestine, Lemons said.

Doctors later ordered an MRI performed at Children's. The misplacement of the results kept doctors from discovering a blood clot in the girl's aorta that cut the cir-ulation to her leg, Lemons said. "Our surgeon tells us that had been caught within of the MRI, they could have her leg," Lemons said.

The girl's left leg was amputated above the knee, and her leg sustained nerve damage, attorney said.

The girl is doing well with her prosthetic leg, Lemons said. Her parents plan to place her in from the judgment in Washington for her, the attorney said.

Children's Medical Center is a private, not-for-profit hospital with 322-bed pediatric hospital, a state-of-the-art emergency department and a children's hospital designed for children.

Fort Worth Livestock Show bull escapes, woman injured

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A bull named Dillinger escaped from his pen at the Southwestern Exposition and Livestock Show and Rodeo and rampaged through the concourse, bumping into people and crashing into a beer stand.

The bull was captured alive, unlike his namesake, Depression-era bank robber John Dillinger.

Cowboys on horseback chased the bull down the concourse and roped him.

Several people suffered minor bumps and bruises, and a 66-year-old woman received a gash in the head from a flying piece of wood after the bull knocked over the beer stand.

The unidentified woman was taken to Harris Methodist hospital where she was in stable condition, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

A vendor, Trent Hackney, 21, told the newspaper he was in the concourse at Will Rogers Memorial Coliseum when he saw people scurrying out of the bull's path.

Hackney said he tried to hide behind the beer stand just as the hornless, one-ton bull plowed into it.

"It knocked me over and every which way," said Hackney, his jeans drenched with beer.

"I tried to hide behind it (the stand). I didn't know the bull was going to hit the stand, and it did."

Trey Watt, assistant general manager of the stock show, said the bull climbed over a 6-foot-high chute wall and onto the concourse.

Lights in the arena were dimmed at the time for a clown's performance but were turned on immediately, and the audience was warned about the charging beast.

"Please do not leave your seats," the announcer told the audience.

"Please do not go into the concourse. There's a bull in the concourse."

Neal Gay, who has provided livestock to the rodeo for 25 years, described the bull as "pretty gentle" and a veteran of rodeos for two years.

"He just wanted out. He didn't want to hurt anybody," Gay said. "The bull was just as shaken as many of the people."

He said he had never seen a bull escape from the chute.

Gay said that if Dillinger "would have been a fighting bull, it would have been a lot worse than it was."

Approximately 2,700 members of the community participated in Replant Texas last year, and 4,000 members of the A&M community participated in Replant this year.

The trees will be planted at public locations in Bryan-College Station, including College Elementary and Southwood Valley Elementary. Additional trees will be planted at the Bryan-College Station and at the College Station on Villa Maria Road.

Rachel Hamelers, a Replant committee member and a senior anthropology major, said committee members have planted trees at elementary schools in preparation for the event.

Hamelers said most of the trees planted this year are older, larger and healthier than the trees planted in previous years.

The tree farm in College Station will house the trees until Replant Texas.

The Replant tradition began in 1987 as a campus environmental leaders and fire leaders planted 400 trees to replant the trees burned in Bonfire.

The National Tree Trust has announced 10,000 tree seedlings to Replant Texas. The Army Corps of Engineers at Lake Tawakoni continues to sponsor the event.
