► JACOB'S LADDER Condom week criticizers miss benefits, education for students

What is new this week? Well, besides entering the "golf-and-yachting" portion of Congress' public service — a.k.a. "presidential acquittal," this week is also condom week.

JACOB HUVAL

Hollywood hormone magnate Sharon Stone called an emergency celebrity press conference to make a correction regarding her infamous "condom statement," in which she recommended that parents make condoms available to their teenagers.

Stone made this controversial statement only weeks before the theater release of Gloria, a major motion picture about a small boy and his loving benefactress (Stone).

Needless to say, this was not wise. Stone came forward, claiming to have been misquoted. "I didn't say 'teens,'" Stone corrected, "I said 'greens!'"

Before press representatives could question Stone about this enigmatic statement, she slowly uncrossed her legs and left the conference for an NRA (Needs to Retire Already) meeting. However, Sharon Stone brings up a good point (no pun intended).

As with greens, for which condoms are used to tie together vegetable produce, condoms are steadily showing promise for uses other than contraception. Innovative uses for the condom spur the need to create new designs.

A few of these new condoms include "burlap," the popular "Chinese fingertrap" model and condom manufacturer Sly's new "laced-with-table salt" condom.

Condom week, despite being largely criticized, is by no means the first or the last controversial program intended for students. Other week-long programs include "hazing week," which is promoted across the nation by numerous fraternity houses and military academies, "study week" (also known as finals), which is actually the only week-long program acceptable to the majority of Americans and "Borrow-a-Bike week."

Although the condom industry is promoting the idea of expanding the condom's application (again, no pun intended) to create a more wholesome image for themselves, opposition to condom week still persists.

The condom industry continues to defend the five-day event by pointing out that a sexually transmitted infection can decrease the odds of a student being admitted to a college.

However, some believe that condom week would be "educational" if sales were to increase. Instead of distributing condoms to students, cast portions of Richard Simmons workout video by annulling any design whatsoever.

Proponents of condom week still harbor hopes that the program will someday be accepted and appreciated by the student body. For example, such as "How to Pass a Test," and the week-long depth study "The Adams Vision" (available for football scholarship recipients only).

Jacob Huval is an English major.
