IFC, Panhellenics head to Chicago for conference

BY RACHEL HOLLAND

Texas A&M Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic leaders will attend a conference for Greek student leaders today through Sunday in Chicago.

Meg Manning, Panhellenic adviser, said 35 A&M fraternity and sorority leaders will join 1,600 other students at the Mid-American Greek Council Association Conference.

She said the conference is the largest of its kind and puts into perspective the interaction between the fraternities and sororities.

She said the conference will include keynote speakers and workshops on Greek issues.

"There are a series of pathways (in-depth workshops), which provide a real, in-depth opportunity for students to learn about a subject," Manning said. "An in-depth subject might be risk management, conflict resolution or recruitment at large schools."

"There's also a breakout session where hot topics are discussed, and substance-free housing might be a hot topic."

Suzanne Tate, the southern area vice president of the conference and Panhellenic president said the conference allows Greeks to exchange ideas and resources.

"Last year, it taught me so much about the Greek system," the junior political science major said. "It is neat to interact with Greeks from other schools to get different viewpoints."

Jeff Hilliard, IFC president and a senior management information systems major, said exchanging ideas at the conference is important because Greek systems across the nation operate differently. He said the conference will give A&M fraternities and sororities the opportunity to explore different methods and strategies.

Joe Theriot, IFC vice president and a senior speech communications major, said students will return from the conference with important information to share with sorority and fraternity members.

"We are hoping to learn about improving our numbers during rush and also about risk management, keeping the Greek system safe," he said.

He said alcohol use and hazing in the Greek system will be addressed in the risk management pathway.

Pan-Hellenic members to attend convention

Seven A&M students to attend 60th annual for African-American fraternities, sororities

Seven Texas A&M students will attend the 60th convention of the National Pan-Hellenic Council (NPHC) Feb. 18-21 in Atlanta, Ga.

The NPHC was formed in December of 1930, in Washington D.C. to coordinate historically African-American fraternities and sororities. The council consists of six regions in the United States and recently extended to include international regions.

It includes nine black fraternities and sororities that elect a president to represent them at the national level.

Diedra Crawford, NPHC adviser, said the main issue for the convention is making changes and improvements to the NPHC constitution.

"The NPHC wants to [create] a council of presidents at the national level so that the nine national presidents can oversee the body as a whole," Crawford said. "This issue will be voted on over the weekend."

Adrian Leday, a senior biology major, is the second vice president of the NPHC, which is a ranking collegiate organization. "This will be the first time since the organization's construction of the 60th convention," he said.

"The NPHC wants to make the body more efficient and to more of its members prove communication council."

Crawford said she also is proposing a change to council regions in the States.

"They (NPHC) are about combining the central regions," she said. "It won't have an effect on the convention."

Elections for the national council will be held during the convention.

Leday, who was elected vice president of the NPHC in October of 1997, will represent Texas at the convention.

Leday said his goal is to give him an opportunity to coordinate activities and coordinate activities. "There will be a collegiate leadership and professional development," he said.

Program readies play for competition

The Texas A&M Theater Program will present The Skin of Our Teeth from Feb. 18 to 20 at 8 p.m. at the George Bush Presidential Conference Center. The program is preparing for its performance in the 1998-99 Kennedy Center/American College Theater Regional Festival at Texas Woman's University.

Professor Roger Schultz, director of The Skin of Our Teeth, said the play is set simultaneously in the present, past and future and contains characters who represent the good and evil sides of human nature.

Thornton Wilder wrote the play, which depicts the Antrobus family, who lives through the Ice Age, the flood described in the Bible and a war. The family survives the situations by the skin of its teeth.

"[Humans] have survived, and will continue to survive by the skin of our teeth," Schultz said.

Schultz said the play has an optimistic tone and emphasizes the resilience of human kind.

"We tend to be most happy and most successful when we are acting altruistically," Schultz said. "I think the play is permeated with that optimism."

Jimmy Humphries, artist in residence and scene designer for The Skin of Our Teeth, said the set, which is in-laid with puzzle pieces, was not designed to be beautiful, deep or realistic. It was meant to portray a simple, cartoon-like quality resembling the surface level of the play's storyline.

"It's a stylized show," Humphries said. "You can't do it realistically."

Nancy Castellanos, a Class of 1998 graduate, portrays the character Sabina who serves as the Antrobus family maid. Castellanos said the play uses comedy to show the resilience of man.

"It's really just a big caricature of what humans are and what they think," Castellanos said.

Castellanos said the production members are not sure how the play will compete at the regional competition in Denton.

"It's a really exciting kind of thing," Castellanos said. "You never know how you'll do until you're out on the stage. We are expecting to do as well as we can possibly do."

Tickets for the show at the Bush Complex are $8 for the general public and $5 for students and may be purchased at the MSC Box Office or upon entrance to the event.

SCONA to present NPR hour

BY MELISSA JORDAN

The MSC Student Conference On National Affairs (SCONA) will take place today through Saturday and will give students the opportunity to address national issues Americans will face in the 21st century.

Robert Siegel, host of National Public Radio's "All Things Considered," Dr. Nancy Dickey, president of the American Psychological Association; Gregg Abbot, Texas Supreme Court Justice; and Boisjoly, former NASA engineer who opposed the 1986 space shuttle Challenger, will speak at this year's conference.

Amy DeLeon, adviser for the SCONA committee, said she chose this year's topic because it is a timely issue, relevant to everyone.

"[The conference] brings up issues that [students] don't normally think of on a day-to-day basis," DeLeon said. "[Everyone] has to think about and establish their own lines."

Participants in the conference will attend discussions with panelists who are experts in their fields and small group sessions called round tables. Martha Middleton, chair of the SCONA committee and a junior education major, said the participants will choose a round table, which are led by professional community leaders.

Middleton said the round tables are usually composed of 12 conference delegates, and give the delegates a chance to share their view points and hear viewpoints of others.

"That's really the heart of our conference — these round discussions," Middleton said.

SCONA speaker presentations in the MSC will be open to the public, and official registration is available today by the SCONA office.
