Fifty delegates will attend the third annual Christian Leadership Conference (CLC) at Camp Lone Star in La Grange this weekend.

According to the CLC Website, the purpose of the conference is to "provide an arena where Christian student leaders can unite and seek Christ together for the sake of His glory."

Iris Saldana, a senior community health major, said the conference's focus this year is found in John 17:22-23. The verse is about Jesus' last prayer, when he prayed for his believers.

"CLC is based around unity within the body of believers and in God's glory," she said. "We break down denominational and other boundaries, learning to live a life like Jesus'," Saldana said.

Dr. Ben Welch, director of student activities, and Frank Cox, class of '65 and former yell leader, will also speak.

Saldana said leadership with a Christian perspective is all about being a servant.

Speakers at the conference include Stuart Hall, director of student leadership for Reach Out Student Ministries in Georgia; Marilyn Giles, owner of Christ and Common Sense, a Christian activity counseling service.

Business Career Fair draws 4,000 students

BY AMANDA SMITH The Battalion

More than 4,000 students with interests in careers in business attended the fourth annual Spring Business Career Fair Monday through Thursday.

Mary Ann Ricca, a senior adviser and dean of business administration in the Lowry Mays College and the Graduate School of Business, said the event provided undergraduates and graduates with experience in communication and preparation for their careers.

"Students, whether they are freshmen or graduate students, learn to communicate and talk to people in other companies," Ricca said. "The process of preparation is really a good experience for the students."

The Texas A&M Business Student Council (BSC) and the Lowry Mays College and Graduate School of Business hosted the event, which attracted more than 140 companies to the A&M campus. Ricca said the Fall Business Career Fair attracts a larger number of students than the Spring fair.

"Students are now learning to plan earlier and earlier," Ricca said. "The companies at the fair have commented that students were prepared. We had a lot of new companies this semester."

New companies attending the 1999 Spring Business Career Fair included Alcatel USA, Aates, Trinity Industries, consulting, Ricca said.

Companies who represent Texas A&M students include sen Consulting, JCPenney R-Us and Enron.

BSC includes 150 student representatives of the 20 student associations. 16 BSC Fair officers, five executive cabinet officers and 10 Business senators represent student Government Association.

BSC and the College started the Business Career Fair in 1980. At the event, only one company came to A&M for one fall semester.
