about a lost-and-found son could make for a great film, as well as display her dramatic role playing. She was definitely wrong about something. Beth Cappadora (Pfeiffer) is a traditional mother of three with the common stresses of a house wife. While at a class reunion where she decided to drag her children one of her sons, Ben, disappears.

From this point on, the movie becomes a Saturday afternoon Television mini-drama.

Losing a child can probably be considered one of the worst things a parent can do, but unless you are a parent it is hard to understand the turmoil and suicidal behavior displayed by Cappadora

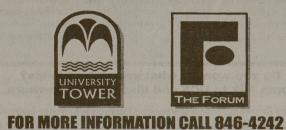

Children constantly show up missing, and unfortunately many are not found. The evening news could feed the appetite of anyone who cares that much to see this sort of drama. (Grade: C)
