FBI alerts U.S. military to watch for possible Serb-led terrorist attacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI has warned the U.S. military to be alert for possible Serb-led terrorist attacks inside the United States after several churches received "threats to kill" American soldiers, according to a memo obtained by The Associated Press.

FBI counterterrorism agents sent out the memo last week after Serbian Orthodox churches in the Sacramento, Milwaukee, Chicago and Indianapolis areas received via fax a Serb-language letter urging Serbian Americans to respond violently to NATO strikes on Yugoslavia.

"The threat letter requested that all Serbian nationalists living in America take action against the NATO decision to intervene in the Serbian/Kosovo conflict by killing as many American soldiers in the United States as necessary to stop the NATO attacks in Serbia," according to the FBI memo.

The memo was distributed to military bases and other sensitive federal installations, such as nuclear weapons labs, through a special electronic mail warning system, officials said.

Dale Watson, the FBI's deputy assistant director for counterterrorism, declined to discuss the memo but said the church letters aren't the only Serb-related terrorism threats being examined by FBI investigators.

"As the war continues, we receive a lot of threats in here. The FBI looks into them," Watson said Wednesday in a telephone interview. "This [letter] is not just an isolated situation. We look at threats; we take them all seriously." The FBI seldom issues the type of memo sent to defense installations.

"We have increased our threat position from Alpha to Bravo."

The agency is investigating whether there is any link between the Yugoslav government in Belgrade and the threats in the United States, officials said.

The alert memo warned military commanders nationwide "that there is a credible threat outstanding to take action within the United States against U.S. military personnel."

Military bases around the country had been on alert dating as far back as last summer's bombing of U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania. But bases are stepping up security measures.

Counterterrorism officials are particularly concerned that bases might be targeted and used prominently in the campaign against Yugoslavia.

"We have increased our condition from Alpha to Bravo," Bob Pepper, spokesman for the Fighter Wing at Holloman Air Force Base, N.M., home of F-16 fighters, said.

The one-step increase in awareness, he said, would not be noticeable to outsiders. It involves more intensive checks and stricter requirements for non-military people entering the base.

Holloman is the only base of F-117s; 24 of the aircraft are to Europe and are flying missions over Yugoslavia.

Pentagon spokesman Robert Bacon said military commanders responding to the FBI warning.

"We are aware of these threats and we have disseminated information to local commanders it's up to them to adjust to the threats they see," Bacon said.

Base commanders have been of working with the FBI, military police or local law enforcement, he said.
