we are bringing him in," he said.

"With the positions he takes, you wonder if he's far left or far right, but then come to find out that he's neither."

Lee Koehler, president of the Students for Individual Liberty and a sophomore philosophy and economics major, said having Hornberger speak at Texas A&M is a way to increase discussion about liberalism.

"We felt there wasn't enough discussion of classical liberalism," he said. "Liberalism is a philosophy which supports the protection of the individual's rights over the social controls of the state."

He said Hornberger's beliefs and other members of the Libertarian party believe the governing body should be controlled directly by the people who are being governed.

"The Republican and Democrat dichotomy that exists in the current political system needs to be reexamined," he said.

"[The Libertarian party] has been gaining support because it's the answer to the problems existing in today's political system."

The turtle in Tuesday's issue was misidentified as an Alligator snapping turtle, pictured above with Dr Lee Fitzgerald. It should have been identified as a common snapping turtle.

from their apartment showing possible cleaning and damage charges. If students are worried about the conditions of their apartments, Bass suggested they ask the apartment maintenance service to give them a cost estimate of the damages it may contain.

Bierman said students should schedule a time with their apartment managers to perform a walk-through inventory check of the apartment.

Unless the apartment complex pays for utilities, Bierman said students are responsible for canceling utility services and contacting telephone services before moving out.

Bierman said once tenants move out, the apartments are required to contact them within 30 days to discuss security deposits or damage bills.
