Leave it to Gregg Popovich to kill the mood.

Popovich, the general manager, fired coach Bob Hill before that night's game in Phoenix. He appointed himself coach, and it was hardly a popular decision.

"It was made with a lot of thought and a lot of counsel and a lot of heartache," Popovich explained at the time, admitting the scenario looked "quite selfserving.'

He was never one to let on that he worried what others thought of him. The same holds true today.

As San Antonio heads into the NBA Finals today against the New York Knicks, Popovich is doing his job in typical no-nonsense fashion. Sometimes brash, always disciplined, he is leading the Spurs us to get better every day, and he's been doing a good job.'

The way the Spurs marched into the championship series losing only one game to Minnesota in the first round then sweeping the Los Angeles Lakers and Portland Trail Blazers demonstrated Popovich's workmanlike approach. Popovich struggled through a public relations nightmare after firing Hill, then led the Spurs to the franchise's worst record that season (20-62). He redeemed himself in the summer of 1997 when the Spurs won the NBA Draft lottery. Tim Duncan was the top prize
