Rudy T recovering from fatigue

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets coach Rudy Tomjanovich is taking a month's vacation from the Olympic qualifying tournament to recover from exhaustion, but he's not giving up his duties as coach of the U.S. Men's Basketball Team for the 2000 games.

Philadelphia 76ers coach Larry Brown, an assistant Olympics coach, will replace Tomjanovich for the qualifying tournament in Puerto Rico from July 14-25, but Tomjanovich hopes to retake the reins next year in Sydney, Australia.

Tomjanovich spent Friday and Saturday night in the hospital after experiencing dizziness and weakness. Team physician Jim Muntz diagnosed Tomjanovich with extreme physical exhaustion and suggested the coach take a month off.

"We have advised rest, and in light of this he will not be able to coach the USA men's senior national team in the pre-Olympic Tournament of the Americas," Muntz said.

Tomjanovich reluctantly decided he should take the doctor's advice.

"I've spent a couple of days in the hospital conferred with my doctor and the prescription three or four weeks of rest," Tomjanovich said. "I'm really disappointed, and I'm going to do the best to recharge myself and get ready for upcoming season."

Tomjanovich appeared tired when he made announcement late last night.

"It's really a great honor and something I'm looking forward to," Tomjanovich said. "But overworked myself and I find myself really physically and mentally exhausted."

The Rockets coach has been working constantly the past two years.

When NBA players boycotted the 1998 Championships of Basketball in Athens, Tomjanovich led an underdog group of amateur league players to a bronze medal.

Brown, Purdue's Gene Beady and Kentucky's Tubby Smith are assistants for the U.S. men's national team. Brown has worked on three USA Basketball coaching staffs.

The team starts workouts in Orlando, Fla., next week.

ALL-STARS

changes should be made in the way the team is comprised.

While the fans should still have some say in who is on the team, it should be on who they want to see on the team, not who starts the game.

The starters should be left up to the managers so the deserving people get to start and fans will still get to see the people they want to see in the game.

Voting practices of fans should also be changed. In Cleveland, fans were allowed to vote multiple times per game and since Cleveland sells out practically every game, their players had a decided advantage over other teams.

If it is a real voting process, regulate it as such. Hand out ballots as fans enter the game, that way each fan gets only one ballot and one vote.

If these changes were already in place, here's how this year's American League All-Star team would look like:

Catcher

Fans' Choice: Roberto Alomar, Cleveland Indians
My Choice: Alomar

At least the Indians fans got this one right. Alomar has clearly been the best second baseman in the league this year. A change of teams and a reuniting with his brother Sandy has helped him regain his gold glove form and kept him (and his bodily fluids) in line.

Second Base

Fans' Choice: Roberto Alomar, Cleveland Indians
My Choice: Alomar

Ripken went on the disabled list for the first time in his career

Third Base

Fans' Choice: Cal Ripken Jr., Baltimore Orioles
My Choice: Tony Fernandez, Toronto Blue Jays

Cal Ripken is a great player — just not as good as Tony Fernandez has been this year.

First Base

Fans' Choice: Jim Thome, Cleveland Indians
My Choice: Rafael Palmeiro, Texas Rangers

In probably the most ridiculous example of how lame the voting process is, Thome received over 675,000 more votes than Palmeiro.

All Palmeiro has done this year is have a batting average 76 points higher and a slugging percentage 105 points higher than Thome, with seven more home runs and 27 more RBI. There should be no reason why Palmeiro shouldn't be the starter in Boston.

1999 AL All-Star Team

- C Ivan Rodriguez
- 1B Jim Thome
- 2B Roberto Alomar
- 3B Cal Ripken Jr.
- SS Nomar Garciaparra
- OF Ken Griffey Jr.
- OF Manny Ramirez
- OF Kenny Lofton
- DH Jose Canseco

Second Base

Fans' Choice: Roberto Alomar, Cleveland Indians
My Choice: Alomar

At least the Indians fans got this one right. Alomar has clearly been the best second baseman in the league this year. A change of teams and a reuniting with his brother Sandy has helped him regain his gold glove form and kept him (and his bodily fluids) in line.

1999 NL All-Star Team

- C Mike Piazza
- 1B Mark McGwire
- 2B Jay Bell
- 3B Matt Williams
- SS Barry Larkin
- OF Sammy Sosa
- OF Larry Walker
- OF Tony Gwynn
- DH Manager's Choice

Designated Hitter

Fans' Choice: Jose Canseco, Tampa Bay Devil Rays
My Choice: Canseco

In his older years, Canseco once again regained the pop that made him the best player in the league in the late 80's.

After hitting over 40 home runs with the Blue Jays last year, Canseco leads the league in home runs for the first half of the season.

Doug Shilling is a journalist.

Shortstop

Fans' Choice: Nomar Garciaparra, Boston Red Sox
My Choice: Garciaparra

Not only was the shortstop voting the closest, it was the one where the fans could not be wrong. Garciaparra edged Derek Jeter of the New York Yankees by 20,000 votes.

Both are considered as the five best players in the game. Their numbers this year have been identical, but Garciaparra gets the nod because his numbers came in nine fewer games.

the All-Star game is Garciaparra's home ballpark.

Outfielders

Fans' Choice: Ken Griffey Jr., Seattle Mariners, Manny Ramirez, Cleveland Indians
My Choice: Griffey Jr., Ramirez, Juan Gonzalez, Texas Rangers

Griffey Jr. was the only other lead pipe cinch besides Rodriguez in the bunch. The apparent to Hank Aaron's career home run record is posted another monster year.

Ramirez's first half performance has people talking about Hank Wilson's record of 191 RBIs falling in recent year, it is nothing close to Gonzalez's. The game's most prolific run producer is tied third in the league in home runs and third in RBIs.

Designated Hitter

Fans' Choice: Jose Canseco, Tampa Bay Devil Rays
My Choice: Canseco

In his older years, Canseco once again regained the pop that made him the best player in the league in the late 80's.

After hitting over 40 home runs with the Blue Jays last year, Canseco leads the league in home runs for the first half of the season.

World Cup

team's defense. This proved true in the game against Germany when the U.S. defense scored on itself from a miscommunication.

The defense came through the semi-finals though, shutting out Brazil, mainly due to the efforts of goalie Briana Scusa.

The United States will play China on Saturday in a championship game that means more than just a victory.

To Confer, who has dreamed of playing professionally, could be the start of a new league.

"[U.S. player] Mia Hamm told me a story that described the impact women's soccer has," Confer said.

"When the team won the World Cup in 1991, 10 people were waiting at the airport to meet them. After winning the U.S. Cup in 1998 there were at least 200 girls waiting for player's autographs. It shows how much the sport has grown and is appreciated."
