Officials seek investigation of Waco fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — More previously undisclosed video footage of the FBI's 1993 tear-gas assault on the Branch Davidian cult surfaced Thursday, and Attorney General Janet Reno asked an outsider to head an independent inquiry into the siege.

The FBI, meanwhile, made public an aerial infrared videotape that runs from just before 6 a.m. to 8 a.m. on April 19, 1993 — covering the period during which the FBI assault on the Davidian compound began and capturing radio traffic related to the use of combustible tear gas canisters.

That footage, which FBI officials said was discovered at the FBI Hostage Rescue Team's offices in Quantico, Va., this week, was seized by federal marshals Wednesday at the direction of senior Justice officials. The Hostage Rescue Team was in charge of operations during the 51-day siege and the final tear-gas assault.

A transcript of the radio traffic, released by the FBI, includes a conversation in which an FBI field commander granted permission for an agent to lob military incendiary tear-gas canisters at a concrete bunker 40 yards from the Davidians' wooden compound near Waco, Texas.

"He can try it?" asked HRT supervisory special agent Stephen P. McGavin, after describing an agent's desire to use military canisters to inject tear gas into the bunker.

"Yeah, that's affirmative," answered Richard M. Rogers, the HRT's assistant special agent in charge.

The FBI said the conversation took place at 7:49 a.m. — nearly two hours after the tear-gas assault began but hours before flames began racing through the Davidians' wooden home at 12:07 p.m.

House to be built on Bonfire site

BY STUART HUTSON
The Battalion

The "House on Campus" will raise a ceremony tomorrow at 9 a.m. on the Bonfire site will officially commensurate the building of the first Habitat for Humanity house constructed entirely by Aggies.

Parker Stucky, public relations representative for Texas A&M's chapter of Habitat for Humanity and a sophomore environmental design major, said the House on Campus program is designed to motivate the A&M community to get involved with Habitat for Humanity by partially building a house at the A&M polo fields.

Taylor Handy, president of the A&M chapter of Habitat for Humanity and a junior genetics major, said the house will be built halfway at the Bonfire site, so that the outside walls and roof are completed.

He said it will then be moved by Crenshaw House Mobile Home Moving company of Bryan to the College Station address.

Handy said this move must be made prior to Sept. 27 so that preparations for the Bonfire center pole may begin.

"Last spring a few of us took it [the house] on as sort of a personal project."

Habitat for Humanity

Stucky said tomorrow's wall raising ceremony will celebrate the completion of the flooring and the raising of the wall frames.

"We can't really have a ground breaking because the house isn't sitting on its final plot of land," Stucky said, "so we are having a wall raising instead."

Stucky said building the house on the A&M campus to be moved to the College Station address introduce legal complications project.

"Since the house is built on state property and then moved to city property, we have twice as many permit inspections," he said.

Stucky said the moving also required extra work by architects who had to alter the before designing a house to be moved three miles.

"Habitat [For Humanity] n't do the project at first because of funding issues and higher ties," he said, "but at the end of last spring, a few of us took it on as sort of a personal project."

The project is being funded by the A&M and Bryan Station chapters of Habitat for Humanity, along with Norwood Mervin Peters, chair of Bank in Bryan and College said the bank is matching For Humanity's contribution of $15,000 as part of its contribution with the A&M chapter of Habitat for Humanity, which three years ago.
