Dallas defense rests in numbers

Cowboys to suit up nine defensive linemen

IRVING (AP) — Whatever quality the Dallas Cowboys lack on their defensive line, they hope to make up for it with a group of young backups.

Dallas will go into the season opener against Washington on Sunday with nine defensive linemen, including five tackles. That does not include their best tackle, Leon Lett, who is suspended indefinitely.

The Cowboys often have gone with eight defensive linemen. When they have kept nine, the extra player usually has been an end.

Lett's absence is the main reason Dallas needs help inside. It is not easy replacing a 6-foot-6, 295-pound veteran who's made the Pro Bowl his last two full seasons.

Alonzo Spellman will start in Lett's place, but he is still learning tackle after playing end most his life. He also faces the challenge of trying to come back from a year out of the NFL.

"It's coming along well, but I've still got things to work on," Spellman, who will probably be a backup at end and tackle when Lett returns, said. "It's all about repetitions — the more you see it, the more you get used to it."

Chad Hennings is the other starting defensive tackle. The starting ends are Kavika Pittman and Greg Ellis.

The four starting linemen have played a combined 16 years in the NFL. There are only 18 games of experience among backup ends Ebenezer Ekuban and Peppi Zellner and reserve tackles Nathan Davis, Michael Myers and Brandon Noble.

"We have a lot of youth with speed and quickness and older guys with strength and know-how," Pittman, who is playing with a bulky cast on his right hand while recovering from surgery to repair two bones broken on the first day of training camp, said.

Without Lett, Hennings is the only link to the dominating line led by Charles Haley that helped Dallas win three Super Bowls in four seasons.

The current edition can not live up to that standard, but it can be better than last year's unit, which was near the bottom of the NFL with 34 sacks. That inability to get to quarterbacks was part of the reason the Cowboys were in the bottom third of the league in pass defense last season.

Practice squad

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys filled their practice squad yesterday with five of the 17 players they released.

Running back Beau Morgan, Ryan Neufeld, offensive line backup Brymer, linebacker Joe Phipps and defensive lineman Robert Newkirk signed after clearing waivers.

The Cowboys had hoped to sign receiver MarTay Jenkins, their first-round pick, but he was claimed by Atlanta.

Dallas surprisingly claimed Chris Brazzell off waivers from the New York Jets on Monday, making him the eighth receiver on the 53-man roster.

There also was improvement in defense, but Lett was a big reason and now he is gone again.

"I think there's a lot of potential and work hard every day, every day," Ellis said. "Our group has to be persistent."

Pressure from the line is even more than usual for Dallas because of backups Deion Sanders and Kevin Smith.

Spurs honored at White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton has welcomed the NBA champion San Antonio Spurs to the White House yesterday, telling the team that politics is like basketball.

"You get ahead, you get behind," Clinton, a self-described "basketball fanatic," said.

"Normally, you don't know whether you are going to win until it's right before the end of the game," he said.

In June, the Spurs won the NBA championship, their first, in a 4-1 series over the New York Knicks.

Clinton extended a special welcome to forward Sean Elliott, who underwent a kidney transplant last month. Teammates were also motivated by Elliott's quick comeback.

Elliott "is an inspiration to a lot of people who have kidney transplants, especially if he can come back for training camp," team captain Avery Johnson said.

The Spurs took a 35-minute tour of the White House before the event in the East Room, which was attended by friends and family, the president and four members of the Texas congressional delegation.

Former Cornhusker returns to football as coach

WACO (AP) — Tommie Frazier always knew he would become a football coach. But first, he had to pass a test.

By choice, the former Nebraska Cornhuskers' star quarterback spent the past two years avoiding the game he once dominated. He worked in the Nebraska governor's public information office for six months and then landed a marketing job with a Lincoln, Neb., telephone company.

Frazier would not even consider coaching until he could prove to himself that he no longer wanted to play.

"I wanted to be able to sit down, enjoy a game on TV and not feel the urge to play," he said. "I wanted to get that desire out of my system first."

Now, nearly four years after leading Nebraska in back-to-back perfect seasons, Frazier said he has done exactly that. He starts this season as Baylor's running backs coach. Although he still looks fit enough to suit up, Frazier said he never even thought of coaching until he was playing, and he said he is a better coach now.

"There's a lot of 30-year-olds out there who still want to play, and they're not doing it," Frazier said.

"I wanted to be able to sit down, enjoy a game on TV and not feel the urge to play."

Clots in his leg during the 1994 championship run, and similar problems caused him to end his Canadian League career after one season.

Frazier is at Baylor because of coach Kevin Steele, who as a Nebraska assistant recruited Frazier out of high school.

Defense rests in Jim Brown abuse laws

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jim Brown's defense rested yesterday without calling ball Hall of Famer to the his domestic violence prosecution.

Brown told reporters in courtroom that he saw add his voice to the have testified about the tween him and his wife, which led to his arrest.

"At this time, I don't see there's anything I can do," Brown said.

Police arrested Brown June 15 after his 25-year-old wife called 911 following an argument with her husband at their Hollywood Hills home. She said she was ever in danger when she was arrested.

The city attorney's office halted due to the violence unit decided to prosecute Brown in a trial in Hollywood Municipal Court on one count of making threats and one count of domestic violence. He faces 18 months in jail if convicted.

The final defense was a psychiatrist who testified that Brown suffered from fears of abandonment and "a borderline personality disorder," which have prompted her to sue Brown's behavior.
