gency. Public schools were closed in Washington, Baltimore, all of New Jersey, Philadelphia and New York City — a part of the country more accustomed to snow days.

New York's mass transit system proved vulnerable to rain just three weeks ago. A freak storm during the morning rush hour dumped 3 inches of rain, halting subway trains and disrupting commuter rail service. Hundreds of thousands of workers got to work late or not at all.

The storm shut commuter rail service north of Manhattan, temporarily trapping roughly 15,000 commuters who had not joined the early rush out of the city. Limited service was restored a few hours later.

The New York Stock Exchange stuck to regular hours, but the U.N. Security Council postponed a meeting on protecting civilians in war zones. U.N. officials said it was the first time in recent history that a formal, open meeting of the Security Council was derailed by bad weather.

and shot at me!" an out-of-breath man told a 911 dispatch operator. "I saw the flash of a muzzle and headed the other direction."

"There's a woman here who looks like she's bleeding in the head!" a church nursery coordinator told another operator.

"This is all [expletive]. This religion is [expletive]," Ashbrook was quoted as yelling during the attack.

"I can't believe you believe this junk and singing this."

Ashbrook lit and rolled a homemade pipe bomb down an aisle at one point.

It exploded, but did not harm anyone.

Seven people — choir members, seminarians and high school students — lay dead or dying in the aftermath. Seven others were wounded, three seriously. Ashbrook then killed himself in a rear pew.

News in Brief

Aggie Bucks debut at first home game

Aggie Bucks will be accepted at concession stands at Kyle Field for all home games beginning at Saturday's football game against the University of Tulsa.

The stands on the east side, the student section, of Kyle Field will be the only concession stands accepting Aggie Bucks.

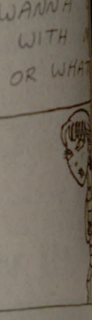

Students must use their own cards to purchase items at the concession stands, not cards borrowed from other students.

Project investigates controlling fire ants

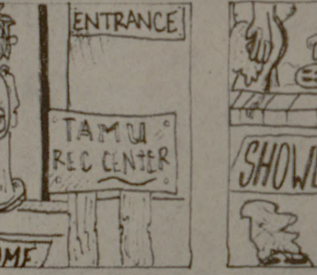

The Texas Imported Fire Ant Project is investigating ways to manage the red imported fire ant population in Texas through biological control.

Bart Drees, Texas Agricultural Extension Service entomologist, said biological control will not necessarily eliminate the fire ants, which originated in South America.
