Mumford
Starring Loren Dean and Hope Davis
Directed by Lawrence Kasdan

Mumford is a small town that makes people feel lucky they live in large cities.

With a great name behind it in Lawrence Kasdan and very funny trailers, Mumford is sure to attract attention in its opening weekend. It is too bad most of that attention is undeserved.

Doc Mumford, (Loren Dean) is a psychologist with something to hide in a small town that appropriately shares the doctor's name.

With a list of odd patients, Mumford (the person) struggles with issues of his own and the variety of problems his patients present him with, especially those of Sofie Crisp (Hope Davis).

Kasdan (The Big Chill, Grand Canyon) returns in his first directorial film since French Kiss in 1995. Kasdan, the master of ensemble films, returns to familiar ground with this comedy, directing the film with a laissez-faire style far removed from his past films.

Sadly, many of the movie's supporting actors and actresses deliver more interesting performances than those of Dean and Davis. Obviously hoping to create new stars (as he did with Kevin Costner and others), Kasdan cast these two relative unknowns in the lead roles.

Davis does a decent job of acting but lacks much of the on-screen presence found in other female leads.

Dean, in his biggest role to date, delivers a lackluster performance which could be intentional or accidental.

If it was an intentionally low-key performance, it should have been made more clear to the audience.

Mumford is, at times, one of the wittiest offbeat comedies to come along in years, but slow movement and a weak performance by the title character (the person, not the town) take away from the movie and prevent Kasdan from recreating the magic of movies past. (Grade: C+)

Blue Streak
Starring Martin Lawrence and Luke Wilson
Directed by Les Mayfield

Martin Lawrence gets to strut his stuff in Blue Streak, one of the more anticipated movies of the year. Regrettably, that is about all Lawrence finds himself doing in this shallow action-comedy.

Miles Logan (Lawrence) is a jewel thief arrested by the police mere minutes after hiding a precious diamond in an air-conditioning duct at a construction site. After a two-year prison sentence, Logan is finally released and plans to reclaim his diamond.

There is a slight problem, however — the construction site is now a Los Angeles police station. Logan must impersonate a cop to gain access to the building and suddenly finds himself in a variety of comedic situations.

Directed by Les Mayfield (Flubber), this film basically is a Martin Lawrence showcase. Mayfield makes a high-gloss attempt to stay away from typical action-comedy cliches.
