2 confess to killing tourist

OAXACA, Mexico (AP) — A Mexican construction worker with a previous conviction for raping a foreign tourist was one of two men sentenced to 40 years in prison for the 1998 rape and killing of American artist Carol Janet Schlosberg.

After a nearly yearlong delay due to jurisdictional disputes, an Oaxaca state court in the Pacific coast town of Pochutla announced the guilty verdict Tuesday, just days after the two men confessed to the attack.

Bricklayer Cirilo Olivera Lopez and Rosendo Marquez Gutierrez, a local drifter, said in court late last week they had been drinking at a storefront bar in the nearby resort town of Puerto Escondido on March 29, 1998, when they saw Schlosberg, who was vacationing from Vermont, walking alone on the beach.

Militia ambush stops

DILI, East Timor (AP) — Australian peacekeepers repelled an ambush yesterday, killing two anti-independence militiamen in the first clash since arriving 16 days ago. The violence came the same day Nobel Peace Prize winner Bishop Carlos Belo received a joyful welcome home.

Belo, who fled during last month's militia rampage through East Timor, is the first major independence figure to return since the violence that forced thousands from their homes and destroyed much of Dili, East Timor's capital.

Yesterday's clash began in the morning, when Australian troops shot the tires of a truck full of militiamen that drove past a roadblock in Suai, a militia stronghold near the border with Indonesia. Four passengers were injured.

Dozens of militia members were disarmed and taken by peacekeepers to the border with Indonesian-controlled West Timor, where thousands of anti-independence fighters have sought shelter along with an estimated 256,000 East Timorese refugees.

The ambush occurred nine miles east of the border, as the same peacekeepers returned to Suai later in the day. Two peacekeepers were wounded.

"That small-vehicle convoy was ambushed by an unknown number of people with firearms.

The rest of the assailants fled the scene. The incident confirmed security concerns the peacekeepers have expressed as they have fanned out across East Timor.

"This is the first time that Interfet soldiers have been wounded by enemy action," Cosgrove said. "It is the first time that Interfet has been called upon, regrettably, to take lethal action against an adversary."

The militias have been massing in West Timor and have repeatedly threatened to launch and retake East Timor.

At the airport in Dili, Belo smiled broadly embraced by Roman Catholic nuns, priest after stepping off a private plane from Dili. He fled East Timor on Sept. 7.

He then traveled to the eastern city of Dili, where joyous crowds threw flowers and sang through the streets.

At a church service, he called on thousands of Timorese who fled the violence to come and build their lives in peace.

He also described conditions in Dili damaged when militias backed by Indonesian military went on a rampage after East Timor's overwhelming vote for independence Aug. 30.

"It is worse than hell," he said.

Following the U.N.-sponsored referendum, Dili home was burned and refugees who sought shelter there were killed. Others were killed by Indonesian troops.
