Court upholds murder convictions

Rulings supported regarding Fort Worth, Lubbock men sentenced to death

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Criminal Court of Appeals yesterday upheld the murder conviction of a Fort Worth man who killed his former girlfriend's family in retaliation for testifying against him in an indecency trial.

William Wesley Chappell, 63, of Fort Worth, was sentenced to death in October 1996 for killing the family of Jane Sitton, his former girlfriend.

On May 3, 1988, Chappell broke into the Sitton home, robbed and shot Lindsey and Elbert Sitton as they sat watching television in their bedroom, court records showed.

Chappell then shot Alexandra Heath while she slept, thinking she was Jane Sitton. According to autopsy reports, Heath was shot in the face four times and in the right arm twice.

Chappell's ex-wife, Sally Hayes, told police he told her he had "shot Jane, her mother and her daddy." When he found out he shot Heath, rather than Jane Sitton, Chappell was "shocked," she said.

Chappell wanted to kill the Sitton family because they testified against him for molesting Jane Sitton's daughter, court records state. In May 1987, Chappell was convicted of indecency with a child and sentenced to five years.

According to court records, while dating in the early 1980s, Jane Sitton, then a teenager, agreed to let Chappell, who was in his mid-40s, molest her daughter because Sitton gave Chappell a venereal disease, court records says. Sitton's mother, Martha Lindsey, later told police about the molestation, which went on for six months.

After his molestation trial, Chappell told Lindsey "it wasn't over with yet" and that he "would get her for that."

Chappell also allegedly tried to set fire to the Sitton home in January 1988.

The Court of Criminal Appeals also upheld the conviction of a Lubbock man who stabbed an elderly woman 21 times and later told police, "I want to die as quickly as she did."

Michael F. Rosales, 25, was sentenced to death for killing Mary Felder, 67, in her Lubbock home while trying to rob her for drug money.

In his confession, Rosales said he went to Felder's home on June 3, 1997 to rob her so he could buy more crack cocaine. When she awoke in the middle of his robbery attempt, Rosales said he stabbed her with a kitchen knife, told her he was sorry, and asked her to die, "but she kept breathing."

Rosales said he knew she was still alive when he left her apartment because "I could hear her choking on her blood."

According to autopsy reports, Felder was stabbed 21 times, cut 28 times, had 34 bruises and 31 puncture wounds. Police recovered a 4 1/2-inch kitchen knife, a fork and a bloody pair of needle-nose pliers, all of which were used to kill the woman, court records state.

In his confession, Rosales said, "I don't deserve to live, and I want lethal injection or the gas chamber for me as soon as possible because I don't want to live after I ... tell the truth about what happened."

Mosquitoes in El Paso found to have encephalitis

EL PASO (AP) — A batch of mosquitoes trapped in northern El Paso County has tested positive for St. Louis encephalitis, prompting health officials to warn residents to protect themselves from mosquitoes.

There have been no reports of people infected with the virus which can cause fever, muscle weakness, coma and, in some cases, death.

Dr. Jorge Magana, director of El Paso City-County Health and Environmental District, said that residents should wear long sleeves and pants, use mosquito repellent and stay inside in the evening when the insects are more active.

The infected mosquitoes were trapped Oct. 4 between the El Paso and Vinton, in a pine tree in the Grande levee behind a marina.

Mosquitoes pick up the virus from infected birds and pass it on to people.

Local health officials have tested batches of mosquitoes to the health department in Austin for months, but this was the first time any tested positive.

Magana said workers were treating ponds and grassy areas with chemical that kills mosquitoes.

Residents can help by emptying containers of water, keeping swimming pools properly chlorinated, changing water in bird baths and bowls every day. Mosquitoes breed in standing water.

Mosquitoes carrying St. Louis encephalitis also have been found in other parts of Texas recently, including Houston and the Rio Grande valley. The Houston area has had confirmed cases of St. Louis encephalitis this year.

The virus is different from West Nile-like virus believed responsible for the recent deaths of at least five people in the York City area. Health officials initially thought that virus was St. Louis encephalitis, which is more dangerous.

Magana said the last confirmed case of St. Louis encephalitis in the El Paso area was in 1984. There were two in 1982 and four in 1979 of the afflicted people died.

"This is a disease that most of the time is not very severe," Magana said. But, he added, "it can be serious to the point of permanent damage to the brain or death."
