AUTOBIOGRAPHY

Becker said she began her research in January 1998 pouring over thousands of letters stored at the George Bush Presidential Library.

"We basically selected letters that were either interesting historically or told the story of [Bush's] life," she said.

The book begins with letters Bush wrote to his mother while he was a Navy pilot during World War II and ends with a letter he wrote to his five children about how it feels to grow old.

Becker said in between the two events are letters from every period of Bush's life, personal and professional.

In addition to tonight, Bush will deliver the keynote address Saturday at a conference sponsored by the George Bush School of Government and Public Service and the Center for Presidential Studies. The speech will deal with presidential decision-making and U.S. military intervention.

ENGINEERING

Jan Rinehart, the assistant director of the engineering studies program, said that while only a small percentage of engineers are women, Texas A&M has a larger representation of women engineers than the national average.

"Only 9 percent [of the engineering workforce] are women," she said. "At Texas A&M we have 20 percent women in our College of Engineering so we are above the national average."

Registration costs $10 and covers three meals, a T-shirt and snacks along with the workshops and panel discussions.

"Sometimes when people see so much suffering and dying, they think they can't help, but they can by learning more about the atrocities," he said.

Angelique Dorazio-Sanders, president of Students for Peace and a senior horticulture major, said the organization is concerned with raising awareness of students about problems throughout the world, not just on campus or in the area.

"[Students] are more concerned about campus and [the area] around us, and we're young and the next people to change the world," she said. "There are parts of the world that need our help."

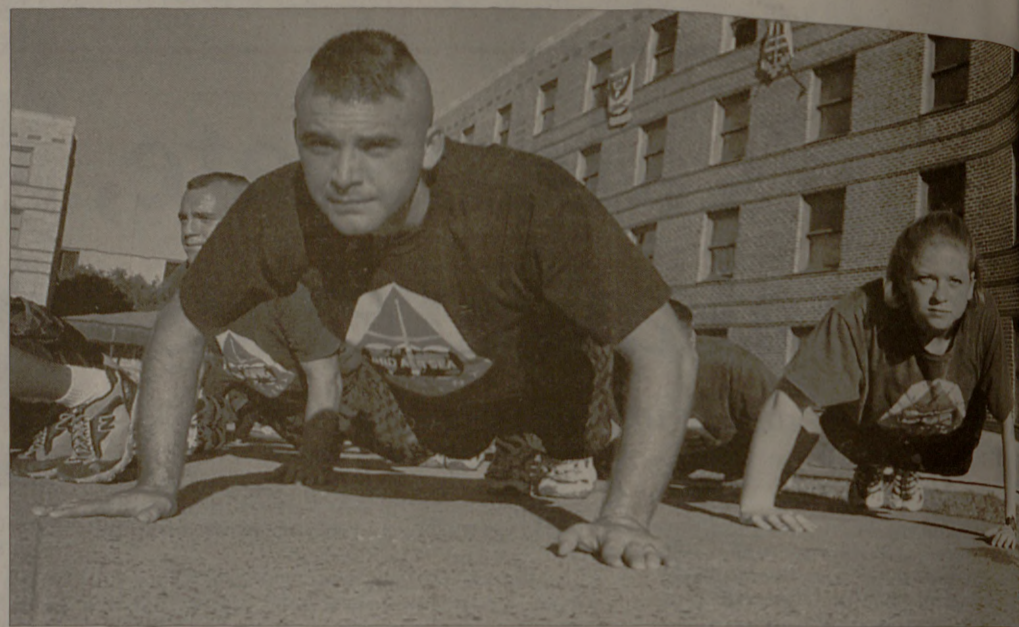

News In Brief

Speakers discuss industrial teamings

The Department of Entomology will host a lecture "Industrial Partnerships — The Challenges and Rewards of Collaborations Between an Entomology Department and Industry," today from 4 to 6 p.m. in the Minnie Belle Heep Center 103.

Speakers will discuss how collaborations between academic departments within universities and interested industrial or academic organizations may be optimized to benefit all participating parties.

Strength in numbers

Chris Kading, a sophomore industrial distribution major, and Alexis Paschedhu, a sophomore civil engineering major, both members of the 1st Regiment, show off their strength in front of the Quadrangle.
