Maryland teen sentenced to 24 years by Israeli court

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Calling the murder and dismemberment of a Maryland teen-ager "an act of desecration," an Israeli judge yesterday ended a lengthy and painful episode in Israel-U.S. relations by sentencing Samuel Sheinbein to 24 years in prison.

Sheinbein, 19, hands behind his back, did not react as the verdict was read two years after he fled to Israel and successfully sought refuge from extradition, enraging Maryland authorities and briefly threatening U.S. aid to the Jewish state.

The sentence by Judge Uri Goren, residing over a panel of three judges at Tel Aviv District Court, was not a surprise; lawyers for Sheinbein and the Israeli prosecution had arrived at the plea bargain in August.

Sheinbein would be eligible for parole after two-thirds of his sentence is served. He also may be eligible for 24-hour furloughs in as soon as four years. The sentence was backdated to Sheinbein's arraignment in 1997.

Under Maryland law, Sheinbein could have drawn a life-sentence without parole. Until now, Israeli minors convicted of murder have never received more than a 20-year sentence.

"[Such] shocking acts of desecration ... show us to what depths the defendant sank ... at the time."

Tel Aviv District Court

Sheinbein confessed in September to choking 19-year-old Alfred Tello Jr. with a rope and hitting him several times with a sharp object that caused the victim to bleed to death. Sheinbein, who was 17 at the time, then dismembered the victim with an electric saw and buried the remains in a garage near Sheinbein's home in Aspen Hill, Md.

Sheinbein successfully sought refuge under a law that allows the extradition of Israeli minors to foreign courts. Sheinbein only passing contact with his father, Saul, who lives in the country.

Such "shocking acts of desecration" that are too horrendous to describe ... show us to what depths the defendant sank and how low he became at the time," Goren said in his sentencing.

Sheinbein fled to Israel days of the discovery of the remains in a garage near Sheinbein's home in Aspen Hill, Md.

He has repeatedly refused to be interviewed by the state's attorney general, but his father, Saul, was the only one to appear in court. He has repeatedly refused to be interviewed by the state's attorney general, but his father, Saul, was the only one to appear in court.

Illinois governor makes visit to Cuba

HAVANA (AP) — Illinois Gov. George Ryan toured historic Old Havana yesterday after attending Mass at the capital's towering Roman Catholic Cathedral, where he was thanked for bringing more than $1 million in humanitarian aid to Cuba.

"Thank you for the medicines," the Rev. Manuel Pagua said during the Mass. "Thank you for your faith."

The Cuban priest called the Illinois delegation's visit an "evangelical mission" of improving relations between Americans and Cubans.

Pounding African drums provided background for a youth choir during the service, attended by 200 people, including Ryan, the state's first lady, Lynn Ryan, and Vicki Huddleston, chief of the state's Cuban Section in Havana.

Chicago archdiocese Auxiliary Bishop Joseph R. O'Connell, who celebrated the Mass with Pagua, hoped to show that the U.S. church was supporting its Cuban brethren.

"It makes you marvel at what has been a divisive between the two countries and how it continued," Perry said.
