FATALITIES

Jeff Schiefelbein, the founder of CARPOOL and a senior marketing major, said the Student Government Association researched multiple programs from other universities to create the program started at Texas A&M.

"It is amazing to me how many students would be driving drunk if we weren't there," Schiefelbein said. "It is proof we are saving people's lives. I have had an opportunity three or four times to be a driver. Our students are not getting into wrecks which is helping to prevent other wrecks in the community."

Currently, the Student Senate is promoting reduced hotel/motel rates for students to encourage students to stay overnight rather than risk falling asleep at the wheel.

GRANT

The mathematics department expects the grant to help the department increase the number of well-trained undergraduate students who seek further study in the mathematical sciences.

It will allow for graduate students to complete their doctoral degrees in mathematics in less time and increase the number of undergraduate students in mathematics-related fields, he said.

"The prestige factor of building this program will be an important factor in recruiting," Rundell said, "not just for the Department of Mathematics but also for the other disciplines which will benefit from the increase in undergraduate involvement in research, such as the computer science department and other engineering fields."

SKYDIVING

"Ags Over Texas was marketed more to just students," she said.

"Waller caters to beginners and teams with high-powered programs for competition, and Wharton has an easy-going, family-oriented style. The other drop zones are welcoming us."

All the drop zones will give the club access to bigger planes than Ags Over Texas offered.

"The small plane that Ags Over Texas owned could only carry four jumpers," she said.

"Waller has Twin Otters, which can carry as many as 20 people, which makes it good for competition."

All three new zones are affiliated with the United States Parachute Association, she said.

The site in Wharton, Sky Dive USA, will host the Scrambled Ags competition Nov. 20.

Allison Ashworth, club treasurer and a freshman business major, said she enjoys the new zones.

"The people there are really nice and treated us well," Ashworth said.

Ashworth said neither her nor her parent's attitudes have changed since the crash of Ags Over Texas.

"I see it as something new to try," she said.

Ashworth said she knew she always wanted to sky dive when she saw jumpers at a balloon lift-off.

SENATE

In other business, the Senate:
• passed the Constituency Relations Bill, making senators more accountable to their constituents.

• created a voting site at the George Bush School of Government and Public Service.

• passed the Alpha Phi Omega, Xi Delta Chapter Recognition Resolution, recognizing Alpha Phi Omega, a national co-ed service fraternity, for the service projects it does.

• discussed the Freshmen and Transfer Student Mid-term Academic Advising Bill, which would require freshmen and transfer students with a grade point ratio of 2.0 or less to receive formal academic advising.

• discussed the Election Dates Revisions Bill, which would set non-Student Government Association organizations' election dates after Spring Break. These two items were sent back to their respective committees for further consideration.
