Seattle killer sought

SEATTLE (AP) — Residents left their porch lights on and walked their children to school yesterday in the neighborhood where a camouflaged gunman killed two boat shop employees and wounded two others before vanishing.

Police called Wednesday's shooting a "deliberate, calculated act" and tried to reassure residents of Seattle's Wallingford district they were safe, even with the killer at large. Police said they did not know his identity and had not found the handgun used in the attack.

"We are confident this was not a random act," Police Chief Norm Stamper said. "I think that those who live and work in that area can be assured that they are not at risk. ... This is not an individual who is going to repeat the act."

Police were searching in the neighborhood around Northlake Shipyard for the man in his 30s who entered the nondescript, two-story building, strode into an office with gun drawn and opened fire without a word.

Peter Giles, 27, and Russell James Brisendine, 43, were killed at the shipyard. The two wounded workers are in serious condition.

The suspect is described as having curly brown hair and a mustache, a baseball cap, sunglasses and a dark overcoat over camouflage clothing.

Police used search lights through the night as they checked yards, basements and garden sheds. Residents also left porch lights on, making the neighborhood "so bright you could barely sleep," resident Paula Nemzek said.

Cyclone cleanup starts in India

PARADWIP, India (AP) — Officials set fire to hundreds of bodies stacked on the beach yesterday, hoping to stave off disease in eastern India, where the first significant aid was finally beginning to arrive a week after a devastating storm.

Among the dead were migrant laborers who had fled crippling poverty in their villages to seek jobs in the port city of Paradwip. The huge shantytown where they lived, located dangerously close to the sea, was wiped out by the giant waves generated by the cyclone. Ajit Kumar Das saw the waves rise, fall back, then rise again like growing mountains. He and other men from the shantytown tried desperately to save relatives and friends.

"We crouched and ran because we would be hurled away if we stood up," he said. "Then we caught each person one by one, pulled them and then carried them on our shoulders. We saved so many, but many others slipped away into the waters."

Since migrant workers made up most of the shantytown's residents, the real death toll in Paradwip may never be known because there are few records of claimed bodies were estimated. The official death toll reached 924, according to Orissa government.

The government said Paradwip's port reopened yesterday, but commercial operations were a safe and desperately needed avenue for emergency supplies.

So far, more than 12,000 tons of food have reached the area by air and sea, but much more is needed for the 20 million people affected by the storm.

You are The Aggie Network

And we need your stories.

Okay Ags, The Association of Former Students needs your help. We know you have at least one special story to tell in regards to your own experience with The Aggie Network — maybe a romance, friendship made, a business deal struck, a door opened by a fellow Ag. Whatever it is, we want to hear it. As a matter of fact, we might even use it in the Texas Aggie magazine over the next year. So grab a pen and paper or boot up that laptop and get to writing. You can mail, fax or email your story to us using the information below. You know our story, and we're waiting for yours.
