PARTNERSHIP

Gerald Anderson, Brazosport Independent School District superintendent and one of the leaders in the program, said the program has enhanced relations between the System and public education in schools. "We work primarily with the University and the public schools," Anderson said. "It has continued Texas' journey relating to education, so that high school students graduate feeling more prepared to enter college."

Anderson has worked with the program in the Brazosport School District since its adoption three years ago.

The Partnership for Texas Public Schools has received $13 million in awards, including funding from the U.S. Department of Education, the Pew Charitable Trust and the Sid W. Richardson Foundation.

The partnership includes more than 400 individual collaborative efforts between A&M System institutions and Texas public schools. The Achievement Through Commitment to Education program is a joint effort between West Texas A&M University in Canyon and Amarillo College encouraging at-risk students to pursue higher education.

The Habitat for Science program, another collaborative effort of the Partnership for Texas Public Schools, provides science-education internships to students in South Dallas through the A&M System Health Science Center's Baylor College of Dentistry.

More than 50 Texas public schools are linked to Tarleton State University's Effective Schools Project.

The Sid W. Richardson Foundation for School-University Collaboration, the first initiative among nation's major university systems, offers study grants to local school district educators and university professors to improve the effectiveness of school-university partnerships.

Another collaborative effort, the Dean's Working Group and the Council of School Executives, aims to address the concerns of the deans of education, university presidents and school superintendents.

As a group, these individuals make recommendations to the Texas Legislature.

"They are interested in giving back in this way to help enrich our programs and help us do a good job of educating students."

Downey said this donation will make it easier for students looking at a possible career in engineering to get into the College of Engineering.

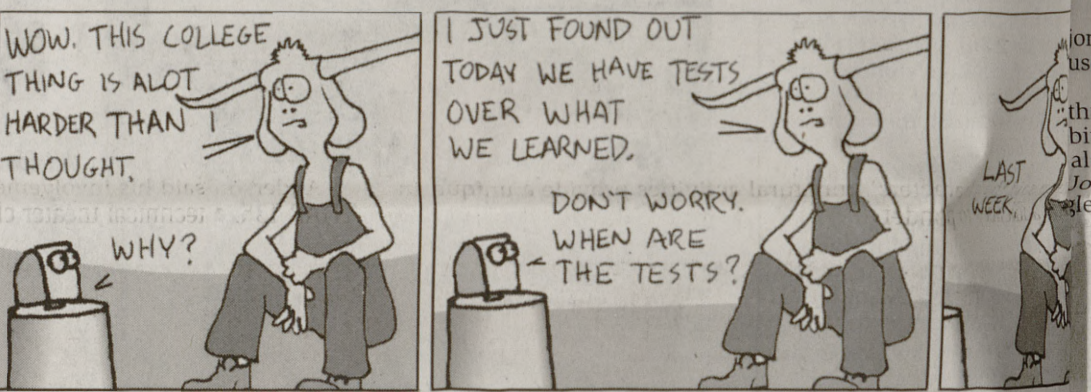

"The students who want to go into engineering will have support available," he said.

Engineering students can apply through their respective departments.

where students and parents had the chance to meet with A&M officials.

"I'd like to see at least 50 students apply," Estrada said. "We want it to be competitive, and if we interview less than three students per scholarship, I'd be disappointed."

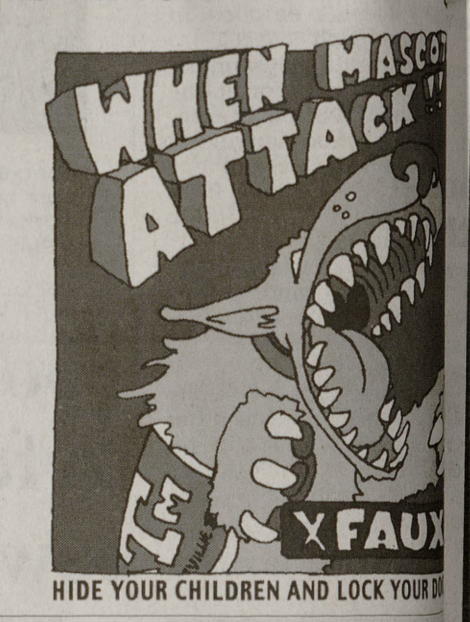

He said depending on the success of the pilot program, Century Scholars may be implemented in other parts of the state.

The high schools participating in the program are B.T. Washington, Barbara Jordan, Charles Milby, Evan Worthing, Jack Yates, James Madison, Jefferson Davis, Jesse Jones, John Reagan, Kashmere, Northbrook, Wheatley, Pasadena, Ross Sterling, Sam Rayburn and Sharpstown.
