Stanford, Cincinnati, Temple and defending champion Connecticut lost Sunday, and Duke needed a late basket and steal from freshman Carlos Boozer to avoid yet another shocker.

A day after Wisconsin stunned No. 1 Arizona and Gonzaga upset second-seeded St. John's in the West, the 2000 NCAA tournament proved it is one of the most wide open ever. Stanford, ranked No. 1 for much of the season, dropped out Sunday with a 60-53 loss to North Carolina in the South. "It is numbing to think the season is over," Cardinal coach Mike Montgomery said after the loss that left as many No. 10 seeds in the field as No. 1s. Since seeding started in 1979, the only other time two No. 1s did not reach the round of 16 was 1981, when DePaul and Oregon State failed to survive the first week. Injuries played a big role in Sunday's games. Cincinnati could not overcome the loss of Kenyon Martin, and Connecticut was lost with Khalid El-Amin slowed by an ankle injury.

Martin, the All-American center who broke his leg in the Conference USA tournament, could only watch in despair as Tulsa beat second-seeded Cincinnati 69-61 in the South. "It's hard when you can't help," Martin said. "It is a helpless feeling. It's very tough in this room right bled, Tennessee beat Connecticut 65-51 in the South.

"I know that I bring the energy and demeanor to this team," El-Amin said. "And without me, we weren't able to go offensively like
