Awards to be presented to outstanding A&M women

The Women's Week 2000 committee will present awards to four individuals who have repeatedly helped to promote women's issues during the Women's Week awards luncheon held in the Bush Presidential Conference Center at Texas A&M Tuesday.

Graduate student Heather Brown, assistant director of engineering student programs Jan Rinehart, associate professor of construction science and architecture Nancy Holland and Associate Provost and Dean of Faculties Janis Stout will be honored with Women's Week awards.

Award winners are first nominated through an open nomination session. A committee composed of students, staff and faculty members then review the nominations to determine who they feel is best suited for the award.

"Award winners are recognized for their dedication and efforts to encourage and promote sensitivity to and awareness of issues that relate to women," said Jill Raupe, graduate admissions supervisor for the Department of Journalism.

Jennifer Harris, flight director for Mars Pathfinder Operations and NASA employee, will serve as guest speaker at the luncheon.

Texas A&M," said Sherry Unello, chairperson of the Women's Week 2000 committee.

The Women's Week 2000 committee has planned a series of events including a display in the MSC bookstore of books written by A&M women writers, and a collection of poems written by Phillis Weatley on display in Cushing Library through March 31. An exhibit in the West Campus library, Rural Texas Women at Work, will be set up through March 23.

"When you first walk into the exhibit, you think, 'What's the big deal?' Nowadays, anyone can bake a pie and clean the house, all in the course of a few hours," said Lalaine Little, coordinator of marketing for the Forsyth Center Galleries. "But what we have to remember is that during these women's time, electricity was rare and they had to do everything by hand."

The exhibit features pictures of rural women between 1930 and 1960 and is on loan from the agriculture extension services of A&M.

A play cast with three women, "Womyn with Wyngs," is being sponsored by the Women's Week committee. It will be presented on March 30 in Rudder Theater and shows how the different women deal with obstacles. The play is open to the general public, and tickets can be purchased in the Rudder Box Office. Tickets are $3 for students and $5 for the public.

any additional fees if they printed less than the quota number. Any additional printouts would cost the students between $0.05 and $0.06 a page. Without the quota system, students would pay between $0.035 and $0.045 for every page printed out.

Hajovsky said having to pay for printouts would completely change the way he uses the computer lab.

"Where I live now, I'm about two miles away from a bus stop. If there were buses that run near where I live, I would be more apt to ride the buses," Garrett said.

Garrett said he also wants to place a cover on all off-campus bus stops to protect students from the rain while they wait for bus.

"I wouldn't be using it if they charged you for email and stuff. ... I don't know when print things out," he said. "The quota would be bad if it was a good number ... That might be bad."

Amy Serres, a freshman computer science major, said she would be upset if they charged more for printing.

"I print out Maple labs, Power Point slides, chemistry notes from the Web. I also print out of practice tests," she said. Serres estimates prints 20 to 30 pages every week.

As for parking fines, Garrett said he wants to reduce the penalty for overstaying a minute parking space from $30, bringing it in line with the fine for parking in a restricted space.
