Project 86
Drawing Black Lines
CD courtesy of
Atlantic Records

Project 86, a Christian "rapcore" band, has been compared to Rage Against the Machine and the Deftones by the music magazine Rolling Stone. Listening to the band's latest effort, Drawing Black Lines, not only brings to mind Rage and Deftones but also 311 and Korn. The band imitates 311's wavy background vocals and Korn's "doesn't it sound like I'm shouting into a tin can" vocals. But herein lies the problem with the CD — Project 86 does not seem to have an original bone in its thrashing, screaming body. According to CMJNew Music Report, "[E]ven the band admits that it's "doing a different take on something that's already been done." While the musicians are clearly talented, the music seems more like a performance, where one can get the music and perhaps would readily notice Project 86's blatant off's of other band's signature sounds. Project 86 may be the cup of sweetened, decaffeinated coffee that people who like Rage's sound could do without all the sweetness. It Slightly Miffed at the Machine while the band's honesty is refreshing as they should know, stealing (Grade: D)
