Massachusetts governor premieres as movie critic

BOSTON (AP) — Have no fear, Roger Ebert. Gov. Paul Cellucci made his debut Monday as a film critic at a TV station with this review of Mission: Impossible 2: "If you're a little tired, that's the movie to go to because you won't fall asleep."

The Republican governor, a movie buff who some say resembles Robert DeNiro, even did his best impersonation of his favorite actor.

"Are you talkin' to me?" Cellucci deadpanned, mimicking DeNiro's line from Taxi Driver.

Cellucci was not paid for his appearance on the morning news program on WLVI — a segment the station hopes will become a monthly feature.

"I wonder if the governor's opinion on movies will carry more weight than his opinion in the Statehouse."

— James J. Marzilli
Massachusetts Democratic Representative

Cellucci's affection for the cinema is well-known. Aides say the governor goes to the movies once or twice a week. He annually shares his picks for the Academy Awards, and he has been endlessly for directors to film in Massachusetts. A signed photo of DeNiro hangs in Cellucci's office — a gift from the actor's cousin, a Massachusetts resident.

On Monday's appearance, Cellucci briefly about a teacher retirement bill he vetoed on Tuesday — then moved quickly to more pressing business.

How about that new Gladiator movie?

With the screen labeling him "Governor Paul Cellucci, Movie Critic," Cellucci pronounced it "a good summer movie."

board asks that the students show their surveys to the board to make sure they meet the necessary criteria. This allows the student researchers to observe other students.

The board prevents research conducted on anyone under age 18, which Albrecht said is a rule the department has always followed.

Some sociology students affected by the review board said they appreciate the new procedure.

"I don't mind working with the review board," Campbell said.

"They are around to make sure that the research is handled in a harmless way.

Although this does create an extra hurdle for students who need to conduct research on humans, Campbell said she does not mind.

"This does add a little bit of extra work as far as the surveys are concerned, but I'd rather a little more work than have my research affect someone," Campbell said.

One A&M student said he feels a lot better knowing that there will be a review board to look over the surveys before the experiments begin.

"It makes me feel that the sociology department cares enough to ensure my physical or mental safety," said Gabe Zazueta, a senior management major.

Zazueta also said the review board makes the experiments and research more sophisticated.

"By having a review board come in to review the surveys, the department is operating at a professional level," Zazueta said.

TEACHERS

In an effort to recruit more teachers, education departments are offering many more scholarships to people who will go into the profession.

More districts are increasing their starting salary and offering higher pay to teachers who plan to teach math, science, bilingual education and special education, areas teachers are primarily needed.

One A&M student hopes the recruitment of teachers will be easier in the future.

"With all the benefits that education departments and school districts are providing to teachers, the profession will hopefully become more appealing," said Kristin Close, a senior English major working toward her certification.

Along with CSISD and the A&M education department, Close agrees that searching abroad for teachers is the best solution to the national shortage.

"You have to do what you have to do, but I'm glad that it is only used as a last resort," Close said. "The quality of education needs to be improved and bringing over teachers who may not be well-qualified won't improve anything. It only substitutes."

Coulson recommends hiring teachers from abroad, but only if it is absolutely necessary because it is difficult to get people who are not citizens certified as teachers in Texas.

CSISD is familiar with the recruiting that is going on abroad, although the need for that type of recruitment is not necessary in this area.

"I have heard of people being hired from Mexico and Puerto Rico for bilingual education," Coulson said.

There are some teachers in CSISD who are not born in the U.S., but the districts have not actively sought them out in other countries.

"We have some teachers who have relocated here and wanted to teach," Coulson said.

H-1B visas are another resolution to the teacher shortage. These visas allow foreigners to work in the U.S.

SUMMER

But some students said they have other reasons for attending summer school.

Mandy Carter, a junior business major, said she needs to take summer school to advance in her major.

"I have to take summer school to get into upper level business in the fall. I am also going because my dad made me," Mandy Carter said.

Valerie Valenciano, a senior marketing major, said there are many benefits for taking classes during the summer.

SENATE

Other senators expressed different feelings about the resolution. About the misconceptions of the Faculty Senate's stance on the continuation of bonfire, Jonathan Smith, associate professor of geography, said, "I think we in the Senate are guilty of excessive circumspection ... sometimes excessive circumspection causes us to blur what we're saying. I certainly support [the resolution] and will send it forward."

Richard Carlson, professor of geology, said that the Faculty Senate is "trying to cast the net so it shows all sides of the situation."

In a mock vote to show Faculty Senate support for the resolution, 29 senators voted in favor of the resolution, and five voted against it.

With the screen labeling him "Governor Paul Cellucci, Movie Critic," Cellucci pronounced it "a good summer movie."

School districts are relative to the New York poor, and lack the legal knowledge and resources needed for them to secure the visas they need to begin a Cold War.

By the time the school districts begin hiring, the majority of visas are gone. They suffer because they are not detecting their citizens and the school year is from August to May. This awkward timing means that school districts with fewer qualified teachers.

Congress has also put a damper on the success of recruiting foreigners will still be in the U.S. In 1998, they passed a law requiring districts to contribute $500 per teacher to a fund that would pay American workers. This $500 fee has added a level of difficulty to small school districts that are financially strapped.

Recognizing this hindrance, Multicultural Professionals, a world-wide recruitment agency, which markets Filipino teachers, made finding teachers easier and cheaper — in fact free.

Multicultural Professionals offers prospective teachers a package deal for $6,000 per teacher, and this service is free to the school district. Prospective teachers pay $6,000 for three-minute video introductions themselves to the districts for district administrators to view. Foreign transcripts are evaluated and skills tests are administered before the teachers, get to America.

The $500 fee and the cut-off of visa applications have continued to cause a decline in the number of foreign teachers regardless of the efforts made by Multicultural Professionals.

"The classes seem easier because some of them cover less material. You are also taking a lighter load and with less hours, you are able to concentrate more on the material," Valenciano said. "Campus is more laid back. It is not as chaotic taking your fall classes."

Jody Brown, a sophomore agricultural business major, said she is taking summer school to get ahead.

"I feel that there is no sense in wasting time. It is better to go to school if I am not going to work on taking summer school, too," Brown said.

In his rant, sports fans only for score on that believe opinions are interesting. I pressed that night issues. Knight is a basketball player. No one is known for his resolution, and five voted against the resolution.

With the screen labeling him "Governor Paul Cellucci, Movie Critic," Cellucci pronounced it "a good summer movie."
