had the lowest unemployment rate for the last 57 consecutive months. Out of the past 125 months, Bryan-College Station has had the lowest unemployment rate for 105 of those months," Basinger said.

JOBLESS

Basinger said cities with universities have low unemployment rates because they offer many jobs.

"Anywhere with a local university is going to have a low unemployment rate because they have a lot of state government jobs. For instance, number two on the list is the Austin-San Marcos area," Basinger said. "Places like Dallas and Houston are probably not going to change because they are so big and it would take a huge percentage to change their unemployment rate."

Griffis said 77,400 jobs were reported in the B-CS area for May, and the University has a large impact on that number.

"Out of the total jobs reported, the largest number of jobs was in state government, which shows the effect the University has," Griffis said. "The state government makes up about 29 percent of total jobs. That is nearly 22,000 state jobs. The state government makes up for the low unemployment rate.'

Griffis said B-CS is difficult to compare with other metropolitan areas.

"I don't think it is a fair comparison. It is hard to compare this area because of the uniqueness. When you get to the larger metro areas, it is like comparing apples and oranges because they have different job markets," Griffis said. "I often use Bryan-College Station as an example of a city that can't be compared to because it is sheer stability.

The number of employed Texans increased from this past April to May by 31,500. This increase was due to the government's need for temporary employment for the 2000 Census. Texas' unemployment rate was 4.2 percent for this past May, resulting in the lowest unemployment rate recorded for the month of May since 1979.

Sodolak said the new community center, because of its size, will allow the office to have more activities than there have been in the past.

"Currently, the community center is one room, so we have to do our activities one at a time. The new community center will be five times as big, and we can have more activities going on at the same time," Sodolak said.

anything used one week prior to the test," Zaun said.

If any drugs are detected during this screening process, the sample is analyzed for the amount of the drug

"There are specific levels of each drug in the sample that we typically look for in order to rule out the possibility of passive inhalation or an exposure that may have happened a long time ago," Zaun said. "For instance, we typically look for 50 nanograms (50 parts per billion) when examining for marijuana. But, with the equipment any lab has, they can look for as little as one part per billion. If you have ever been exposed to pot in the last few months, it would show up [at one part per billion] because marijuana will deposit itself in the body's fat cells and stay there."

A common tactic of those wishing to evade a positive result on a drug test is to dilute their urine with water.

"A real dilute sample always sends up a red flag during testing," Safe said.
