Junior civil engineering major Colin Blankenship said the removal of the logs will improve the morale of students, faculty and passing motorists. "I think for the healing process to continue progressing, the tragedy needs to finally be put to rest," Blankenship said. "The logs serve as a constant reminder of the pain associated with the tragedy, and I don't believe that I am alone in saying the night that bonfire fell is not something I want to think about every time I drive to class."

Ground water shortage will be minimized by the addition of the new underground water storage tank, and additional waterlines will be able to supply water to campus in the event that another line breaks. Boswell said this project is beneficial to and necessary for the A&M campus. "As any city grows - this campus is a big city - the demand on the system gets greater," Boswell said. "There are more buildings, students, faculty, and more people use more water. The lines from 20 years ago are not sized right for the job."

Boswell said most of the work has already been done, but that there may be slight inconveniences for students returning in the fall. "The only real inconvenience for students is that some lines will run through their parking lots, for example, parking lot 50 on Bizzell," Boswell said. "The construction going on now in the lot in front of Zachry consists of a backhoe digging a ditch through the lot for a waterline. This is a very viable and growing campus. "It takes a lot of construction just to stay even with it, considering the growth. It's an ongoing process to keep building," he said.

Despite not being allowed to coach the team, the coaches still take an interest in the players' involvement. "I think it is beneficial as far as them (the players) coming together as a team," said Mark Johnson, the assistant head coach at A&M Consolidated. "It also keeps them focused with what they are doing offensively and defensively in their mind."

News in Brief

Prisoner found dead in cell HOUSTON (AP) — Prison officials on Tuesday were investigating the overnight death of a Texas Unit prisoner who was found on the floor of his cell with a shoestring around his neck. Authorities believe James Wilson, 27, was killed by another inmate in what could be the latest in a series of violent events that have recently disrupted the nation's second-largest prison system. Wilson was found at 9:30 p.m. Monday lying on his back as guards made their rounds, said Larry Todd, spokesman for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

U.S. places curfew on soldiers SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Amid growing anti-American sentiment, the U.S. military in South Korea has instructed soldiers not to go out at night and told them to travel in pairs and stay out of trouble, officials said Tuesday. The restrictions, similar to those imposed on U.S. servicemen in Okinawa, Japan, stem from recent anti-U.S. demonstrations in Seoul and the stabbing death last month of an Army doctor, said Kim Yung-kyu, a U.S. command spokesman. Some 37,000 American troops are stationed in South Korea. The doctor, Maj. David Bernick, was killed in broad daylight by a South Korean man with a record of mental illness. The military said the attack was unprovoked. Thousands of South Koreans took to the streets Saturday after the U.S. military acknowledged it had dumped formaldehyde into Seoul's Han River, a major source of drinking water for South Korea's 42 million people. The protesters lobbied for weeks into the U.S. military compound and pelted a nearby building with red paint, demanding punishment of those responsible. The military said the 20 gallons of formaldehyde was treated by the sewage system before it entered the river, and was therefore not harmful to the environment. The South Korean media criticized the chemical dumping as "disregarding the South Korean people." "Do you in the United States dump such poisonous chemicals into the Potomac River?" asked a recent editorial in the Chosun Ilbo newspaper. In response to the uproar, the U.S. command also extended major night spots in Seoul that are frequented by American soldiers. Many shops and bars reported a sharp drop in business, with few American visitors. "Sales have dropped as much as 30 percent," said Hahn Ji-won of Nashville Extension, a bar in Itaewon, a neighborhood near the army base. The U.S. military imposed a late-night curfew and a drinking ban on all its service members in Okinawa earlier this month after several incidents they allegedly committed that have enraged the Japanese. The order seemed aimed at calming the community ahead of President Clinton's visit to the island for an international summit this weekend. Most South Koreans support the stationing of U.S. troops in the country as a deterrent to military threats from communist North Korea. But many are worried about crime and other controversies allegedly involving American soldiers. Protests have been on the rise since early May, when a U.S. Force fighter jet dropped six bombs on the Koon-Ni Range near a west coast village of Mae Hyeon, 50 miles southwest of Seoul.
