Texas-size decision at UT

Still no word from Brown on who will start

AUSTIN (AP)— Just a few days shy of the season opener and Texas coach Mack Brown says he still can't decide on a starting quarterback. Major Applewhite and Chris Simms have staged a preseason duel to start for the sixth-ranked Longhorns, who open the season at home Saturday against Louisiana-Lafayette (0-1). Brown's message to Texas fans waiting for the final word: Do not hold your breath.

The decision is likely to wait until the last minute and there is little chance of any public announcement before the game. "We'll make the decision sometime before game time and we probably won't tell anybody except the two quarterbacks," Brown said Monday. "We have our team it doesn't matter, we have two starters. That's the way we're going to approach it. I don't think the team will know until they run out on the field."

Applewhite passed for 3,357 yards and 21 touchdowns in leading Texas to a 9-5 season in 1999. But a torn knee ligament in a 27-6 Cotton Bowl loss to Arkansas opened the door for Simms, the left-handed son of former New York Giants quarterback Phil. Simms threw for 223 yards and one TD in mostly mop-up duty last season. His only start was a 20-16 loss at Texas A&M. Simms has taken most of the snaps with the first team during pre-season workouts but both players say either could get the ball on Saturday. Brown continues to leave it open that

"We've got to look at who's going to be the best starter on Saturday, who's going to be the best off the bench and have the best chemistry," Brown said. "Right now, the kids are handling it really well; the team is handling it really well." The Longhorns say they do not care when a decision is made, whether it is today or right before kickoff. "We can win with Chris Simms and we can win with Major Applewhite," said tailback Hodges Mitchell, who ran for 1,346 yards last season. Applewhite said he and Simms are more similar than most people realize. He cringes when given credit for being a smart player, while Simms is praised for his physical tools, namely his 6-foot-5 frame and strong arm.

Both he and Simms are physically and mentally talented enough to win, Applewhite said. "To hear people say, 'I wish I could combine Major's brains and Chris's athleticism' is just ridiculous," Applewhite said. "It's a slap at both of us really. We're a lot more both could get a lot of playing time. "I'm sure (the coaches) have a little idea in their mind," as to who will start, Simms said. "Nothing would surprise me. Sure I want to play, but if they decide otherwise, that's the way it goes."

Brown said there is a lot of evaluating still going on.

APPLEWHITE

"It's a slap at both of us really. We're a lot more alike than we are different."

RUNNING

A newcomer on the women's team, who looks to contribute early, is Katherine King from San Antonio's MacArthur High School.

Hartman said the women's prospects for qualifying for nationals look good.

"It's a long season and a lot of things can happen," Hartman said. "However, we are in a position right now where, if we do the right things, train hard and stay injury-free, we will be at the national championship meet."

The only cross country meet on the A&M campus this year is the Texas A&M Invitational. It will be held Oct. 14 at the University Golf Course.

The meet will serve as the final stepping stone for both the men's and women's teams before the Big 12 championship, which will be hosted by the University of Colorado two weeks later. The men and women can anticipate a challenging run in Boulder, the home of the three-time defending champion Buffaloes, where they will be competing at an altitude of approximately 5,500 feet.

BIG 12

In the Sooners' first game against Texas-El Paso, Huepel showed to be the same game-breaking quarterback who finally had some help in the backfield with freshman running back Renaldo Works. OU rolled away with a 55-14 win.

The Aggies showed to be stronger in the backfield with a triple threat attack between junior fullback Ja'Mar Toombs, sophomore running back Joe Weber and freshman running back Richard Whitaker. Despite losing to Notre Dame, the Aggies answered a lot of questions on offense and can focus their efforts during the two off weeks on increasing their scoring.

Both A&M and OU had numerous questions as they entered the season. Now they have been answered, and the teams can get to work on winning the Big 12 South.

Sports in Brief

Texas A&M basketball team loses two recruits the first week of school

The Texas A&M men's basketball team registered a loss last weekend.

Aggie basketball coach Melvin Watkins announced the departure of two of his highly touted recruits from last year's bumper crop.

Freshman guard Trayvean Scott of Baton Rouge, La., withdrew from A&M, and freshman forward Jesse King of Detroit has failed to reach academic entrance requirements, Watkins said Friday.

Scott fell victim to a common problem for many freshmen at A&M — he missed home.

"Trayvean was here for one day and decided he was homesick," Watkins said. "It wasn't anything against Texas A&M; he just decided he wanted to be with his family."

Watkins said losing Scott should leave a tangible void for the Aggies to fill.

"He was a young man that we were counting on to compete for playing time," Watkins said. "We'll move forward and someone else will have to pick up the slack."

The 6-foot-6 King should be back on the team after December, if he is able to meet entrance requirements by that time.

"We look for Jesse King to be on the team for the second semester," Watkins said.
