Mike Jones, a spokesman for Gov. George W. Bush, said state employees received $100-a-month raises in both 1998 and 2000. Additional pay raises were given to child welfare workers, key computer staff and prison guards, he said.

"Gov. Bush values the work of state employees, and his staff is concerned about our turnover rate," Jones said. "If the governor is in office next year, he will look forward to working with legislative leaders on ideas to retribute the accelerating turnover tain our best public servants."

September 26.5:

Cool-acting bird helps launch youth message

AUSTIN (AP) - Hip-hop music plays and a smooth-talking animated duck disses a stressed out smoker.

"Tobacco is foul," says the rebellious duck, definitely a bird with an attitude.

It's the centerpiece of the state's new youth anti-smoking ad campaign — the first to be paid for with some of Texas' $17.3 billion tobacco settlement money - that gets going Monday.

Teen-agers from across the state who were recruited to help create the $2 million anti-smoking ad campaign selected the duck mascot.

The advertising and public relations effort is part of a pilot project targeting parts of East Texas and overseen by the Texas Department of Health. The initiative is aimed mostly at young people between ages 11 and 18, with a particular emphasis on sixth- through eighth-graders.

Hence, the hip-talking duck.

"It will be hard-hitting, realistic, timely and speak to kids in a language they can relate to," said Dr. Phil Huang, chief of the health department's bureau of disease, injury and tobacco prevention.

Statewide research has shown that sixth-graders are at the highest risk of starting to use tobacco, Huang said.

The anti-tobacco campaign is intended to have a special focus on Hispanic, African-American and Asian-American youths.

Speaking in English and Spanish, the duck will be featured in television, radio and billboard ads in four media markets: Houston-Galveston, Beaumont-Port Arthur, Tyler-Longview and Bryan-College Station.
