Amazon apologizes for pricing

SEATTLE (AP) — In the span of two weeks, Amazon.com has been forced to apologize, issue refunds and appease angry customers after charging some people higher prices than others for the same items.

Amazon.com has been forced to deny allegations that the different prices were based on customer data it collected on shoppers as they visited its site. That data includes everything from addresses to what someone bought previously at Amazon.com.

"We've never tested and we never will test prices based on customer demographics," founder Jeff Bezos said Wednesday.

Setting prices based on a shoppers' income level or buying habits is known as "dynamic pricing." For example, department stores in well-to-do areas often charge more for the same goods than stores in poorer sections.

"We never will test prices based on customer demographics."

— Jeff Bezos
founder of Amazon.com

But software tools allow online retailers to compile sophisticated dossiers on visitors to their sites. Using billing information and purchasing history, e-tailers can learn customer preferences and target individual shoppers with customized screen offerings.

Amazon.com ran into trouble a few weeks ago when customers who bought DVD movies began comparing notes on online discussion boards.

The online book-and-CD store said it had been randomly offering the same DVDs at different prices to different customers as part of a market test.

Amazon.com spokesman Bill Curry said the tests were useful in determining how much Amazon.com could charge and still maintain a good sales volume.

DJ 'mudfest' trashes toad habitat

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Two disc jockeys have been fined for allegedly promoting a mudfest that torpedoes 25 acres of sensitive wetlands habitat for a rare toad.

"It's churned up so much mud there's no vegetation left," geologist Bob Akright. "There are deep ruts. There's oil floating in the water."

The truck drivers passing through a national forest on the way to the wetland, home to several toads. The creatures are on Colorado's endangered species list and under study for federal protection.

U.S. Forest Service officials said hundreds of people in mudster trucks and sport utility vehicles headed for Caribou Flats west of Boulder on Saturday after hearing disc jockeys Stephen Mead and Darren McKee talking on the air about the thrill of mud-driving.

The DJs and KBPI-FM station manager Don Howe deny they sanctioned or promoted the event. The DJs apologized, saying they wanted "to make this right."

Woman wants 'fistful' from Eastwood

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — A federal jury Thursday began considering whether a disabled woman deserves a "fistful of dollars" from Clint Eastwood because his hotel was not fully accessible to her wheelchair.

John Burris, the lawyer for Diane zum Brunnen, did not ask for a specific dollar amount. But he urged jurors not to excuse Eastwood from complying with the Americans with Disabilities Act and a similar California law because he's a celebrity.

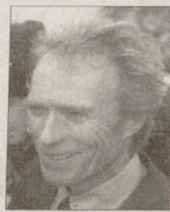

"Mr. Eastwood is a very special man, no question about it," Burris said, gesturing across the courtroom toward the actor-director who's been in court every day since the trial began Sept. 19. "I believe he thinks as a matter of principle he is entitled to special consideration from you."

Burris said Eastwood spent millions renovating his Mission Ranch near Carmel but neglected to spend a "fistful of dollars" to improve disabled access, a reference to the first of the "spaghetti Westerns" Eastwood starred in.

Eastwood attorney Chuck Keller used the same reference, accusing zum Brunnen and her husband of visiting Mission Ranch merely to find grounds for a lawsuit.

"Make no bones about it," Keller said. "That's why the plaintiff is here, and that's why you're being asked to decide this case: Because she, and those who represent her, want a fistful of dollars."
