the money will be donated under a scholarship named after Linda De Salvo, the 1996 president of the Brazos Chapter American Institute of Architects.

"She passed away several months ago of cancer and the scholarship funds we get for doing this project will go to A&M in her memory," Henryson said. "We are hoping to raise $5,000."

Plans to build a Sheraton Hotel and a conference center fell through due to financing problems, but students presented a plan to build a hotel and restaurants.

Private ownership of much of Wolf Pen Creek causes difficulties in getting such ideas started quickly.

Surveyors are obtaining permission to survey land of private owners in order to extend the trails and maintain them in the future.

"We are trying to make it possible to bike all the way from campus, through the district, and actually come out the other end, and go into the rest of the greenways," Henryson said.

The concept of a "bark park" was proposed, which would allow dog owners an area to play with their dogs without having to keep them on a leash.

Several small stages would be developed, allowing for theater performances, and a water park has been proposed.

Business owners recommended the best types of commerce to go into the area. Ideas ranged from an Internet cafe to restaurants and a museum.

"There were a lot of different people involved, which, I think, made it stronger in identifying what's needed," Henryson said.

The Wolf Pen Creek oversight committee is in charge of prioritizing and implementing the ideas.

"The process now is analyzing the ideas and finding how much things will cost," said Steve Beachy, director of parks and recreation. "A wide variety of ideas were generated by these teams. The hard part now will be putting them all together in a report form."

The money for the project comes from several different areas, including bonds drainage funds and the parks department.

The district was developed as an increment tax district, which means taxes collected in the area go directly into improvement of Wolf Pen Creek. Exact figures of the costs of the improvements are not known, especially since the plans include changes to bike trails and the creek, which will require private funds to cause these areas are privately owned.

"We are hoping the private sector will coordinate with the city to make the changes," Henryson said.

and giving individuals a Nov. 1 deadline to make claims for personal items. Each hall council will have a Dec. 1 deadline to present a plan for Residence Life for the "fate of the aforementioned items."

Greider and the anthropology department has been cataloging and preserving items collected from the Bonfire memorial. The department has kept every item that was stored there, placing a few items in storage for enhanced preservation.

In other business, Aggie Recreation Committee (ARC) member Matt Brown, a sophomore general studies major, requested help from RHA members in ARC's visits to hometown high schools to recruit future Aggies.

"We can't be everywhere, so we are trying to get interested students to go to their hometown high schools for us," he said. The goal of ARC is to get high school students interested in attending the University. Its main task is visiting high school campuses across the state in early January.

In order to represent ARC at a hometown school, a student must attend an ARC information meeting at 292B Memorial Student Center at 5 p.m. either Nov. 1 or 2. Training, which is also required, will be held Nov. 1.

In other business, RHA Vice President for Relations Amanda Trimble, a junior journalism major, announced part of the ongoing series of round-table discussions to be held Wednesday at 5 p.m. in 507 Rudder. The round table will discuss student issues with Parking, Traffic and Transportation Services (PTTS).
