ELECTION

television Thursday watching the unofficial recounts, and "I hope they're going to be a lot more accurate than the other night."

That was a reference to television networks that prematurely declared Gore the winner in Florida and then reversed course and said Bush had won the state — and with it, the White House.

In addition to the partial recount-by-hand in Palm Beach County, the board in Broward County arranged a meeting for Friday to discuss the Gore campaign's request for a manual recount there.

With the outcome of the presidential race in the balance, allegations on both sides were becoming increasingly heated.

Gore campaign manager William Daley said courts may find the Florida result "an injustice unparalleled in our history." Bush chairman Don Evans countered, "The Democrats who are politicizing and distorting these events risk doing so at the expense of our democracy."

More than a thousand Gore supporters demonstrated outside a government building in downtown West Palm Beach, demanding another election in the county. They said the confusing configuration of their ballot had cost the vice president votes.

"Gore got more," they chanted. The Gore campaign contended the ballots in Palm Beach County were illegal. Reform Party candidate Buchanan said "ineptitude" in ballot design may have caused many Democrats to vote for him inadvertently.
