Clinton grants clemency to 140 on last day in office

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Susan McDougal is looking forward to a new life now that she has a pardon from President Clinton excusing her for her Whitewater-related crimes.

CLINTON

"I get a fresh start, and it's a great feeling," Clinton's former Whitewater business partner said after he freed her from the burden of four fraud convictions.

McDougal was among 140 people Clinton pardoned in a mix of personal and historic acts of clemency Saturday just before leaving office.

Asked if they all deserved pardons, Clinton responded from his new home at Chappaqua, N.Y.: "Absolutely. I wouldn't have done any if I hadn't thought that."

"You're not saying these people didn't commit the offense," Clinton said Sunday. "You're saying they paid."

Others receiving pardons included Patty Hearst Shaw, former Arizona Gov. Fife Symington and Clinton's own brother, Roger, who was convicted on drug charges in 1984.

Left out of the pardons and sentence commutations were financier Michael Milken, who had been the subject of speculation that he might win a pardon, and former Justice Department official Webster Hubbell, who worked at the Rose Law Firm in Little Rock with Hillary Rodham Clinton and pleaded guilty to defrauding it.

Also not on the list were McDougal's former husband, James McDougal, who was convicted in the same 1996 trial but died while serving his prison sentence, and former Gov. Jim Guy Tucker, who was convicted with the McDougals.

Symington's pardon wiped out his criminal liability in the bank and wire fraud conviction that forced him from office in 1997. An appeals court overturned his convictions and prosecutors were still pursuing the case against him. He still faces a civil case stemming from a $10 million loan to six union pension funds.

Symington said he felt the pardon was based on a shared belief against politically oriented legal group, and was sent to prison for a San Francisco bank robbery. President Carter had previously cut short her prison term, and Clinton's pardon wiped the conviction from her record.

"This action by President Clinton has enormous significance for Ms. Hearst and her family," said her lawyer, George Martinez of Tiburon, Calif. "The pardon represents an act of ultimate understanding for which she is thankful."

McDougal was one of four figures from the Whitewater case that dogged the last seven years of Clinton's presidency who won pardons.

The other three were former Whitewater real estate agent Chris Wade, university professor Stephen A. Smith, and former Madison Guaranty appraiser Robert W. Palmer.

The McDougals and the Clintons were partners in the Arkansas land development that gave the Whitewater investigation its name.

Smith, a communications professor at the University of Arkansas who pleaded guilty in 1995 to using funds from a $65,000 business loan to pay off another loan, said he was a victim of a hunt that grew out of the original Whitewater case.

He had said earlier that he did not need a pardon. He was sentenced to a year of probation and 100 hours of community service, and fined $1,000.

"I was very surprised," Smith said Sunday. "I'm sure he has concerns for people who were innocently dragged into (Watergate prosecutor) Kenneth Starr's web."

"I kept telling myself, go shopping, be normal, don't sit and watch television, don't get caught up in it," McDougal said. "When (word of the pardon) came down, I could feel how much I've been waiting."

prosecutions and not necessarily because he once rescued Clinton from a riptide.

Symington and Clinton have known each other for more than 30 years, sharing a mutual friend, Symington's high school roommate who was Clinton's roommate at Georgetown University.

During a trip to the Massachusetts coast in the late 1960s, Clinton got caught by a riptide and Symington said he jumped into a rowboat and pulled him out of the water.

"He probably would have survived, but I lent him a helping hand," he said.

Jackson speaks publicly after admitting affair

CHICAGO (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson thanked his family and supporters for standing by him as he spoke publicly Sunday for the first time since acknowledging he fathered a daughter during an extramarital affair.

But Jackson, speaking briefly to worshippers who packed Salem Baptist Church, saved his most personal comments for his wife, Jackie.

"After 38 years and five children later, Jackie, we're still here," Jackson said. "I love you so much."

The civil rights leader said he was grateful to supporters who made it clear that they want him to return to the helm of the Rainbow/PUSH Coalition as soon as possible, and indicated he is ready to resume his work.

Jackson, who had been in seclusion since acknowledging the affair four days ago, told The Associated Press Saturday that he would return to the civil rights stage next week.

Greyhound bus overturns in N.J.

LAKEWOOD, N.J. (AP) — Forty-six people aboard a Greyhound bus en route to New York from Atlantic City were injured early Sunday when the bus overturned.

The injuries were mostly minor, with some broken bones, state police said. Five people were treated at the scene and 41 were sent to area hospitals.

The bus slid in snow on the Garden State Parkway near Lakewood, spun out and hit a guardrail before overturning, police said.

On Saturday, 40 people were injured when a bus en route to Scranton, Pa., from New York overturned and caught fire in Alamyuchy in northwest New Jersey.
