News in Brief
Unofficial numbers predict decrease

Unofficial enrollment figures for Spring 2001 show Texas A&M's student body at 41,100 strong.

The total is split between 21,725 men and 19,427 women. The numbers show a drop in fall enrollment figures, with the university recording 44,038 students last year, a University spokesman said. University officials said enrollment typically drops in the spring.

"Not nearly as many students transfer in as graduate in the fall," Stephenson said.

There was a slight increase this semester from the 40,000 enrolled in Spring 2000.

Enrollment figures are compiled by the Office of Institutional Studies and Planning after the 12th class day, but are not officially released until the 15th class day. Those figures include a numerical breakdown of the student body by ethnicity, gender and other categories.

PARKING

parking spaces cannot pay for themselves. Mies said it would be fair to levy taxes on the entire area used by just a certain segment of the population.

Any questions about the policies or upcoming parking projects can be directed to the Community Enhancement Action Center at 764-6363.
