pass/fail grades. However, the site has little information about course sections in classes after Fall 1999, even though a menu on the site indicates the data is up to date through Summer 2000. Pickaprof.com delivers a similar service to students of Texas A&M and the University of Texas at Austin. While Pickaprof.com uses the same official University data, additional services are available, including a used-book purchasing option, class schedule planner and calculator information.

The main differences between SGA's course guide and Pickaprof.com are the professor ratings and grade distributions. Pickaprof.com uses A&M's official end-of-course evaluations and individual student input to determine professor's rating. Grade distributions are based a professor's total number of students in all classes and on statistics in individual sections.

Undergraduate and graduate course section grades are tallied separately but included in the instructor's overall rating. Drop percentages, grade-point ratios given by an entire department and given by all professors of a course are also calculated.

Pickaprof.com founders Chris Chiles and John Cunningham began their Website last April. At the time, both Chiles and Cunningham were seniors at A&M. After graduating, they moved their operation to Austin and now have three additional employees.

Chiles and Cunningham say the business has been very successful and the operation will expand to include other universities.

"We have laid groundwork for over 150 schools," Chiles said. "More Texas universities will be joining soon. Pickaprof.com hopes to have about 20 schools next semester."

Not everyone liked the idea of giving grade distributions over the Internet, Cunningham said. Pickaprof.com was initially met with some contempt by A&M and UT officials.

"There was some resistance at first, but nothing unexpected," Cunningham said. "We are now finding that students and instructors are requesting our service."

Pickaprof.com's services are free and will remain so, Chiles said. "This site is about students for students and it always will be," he said.

lived and trained at the old Bryan Air Base. Mike Sindors, one of the attorneys for the defendants, declined to comment. Chapa is now in law school at St. Mary's University in San Antonio and Boyd is attending college in Michigan.

Neither Chapa nor Boyd were available for comment. Brazos County Attorney James Kuboviak said it could be difficult to pursue the case nearly four years after the alleged hazing. Sindors contacted Kuboviak on Wednesday, but no further decisions will be made until the two attorneys talk again next week.

"I've got to see if I can get all my witnesses together to see if we can pursue this," Kuboviak said.

those who are ahead of the class," McFarland said. "We currently have a fourth-grader who is working on algebra with a school volunteer."

McFarland said this allows the students who are ahead to remain challenged while the teacher can work with the class. Each week, more than 1,800 students volunteer for the Bryan Helping One Student at a Time (HOST) program. The HOST program began in the 1992-'93 school year on two campuses and has since spread to nine. Two of the campuses now use bilingual volunteers to work with Spanish-speaking students.

Williams said that, since her son has received tutoring, he has excelled both academically and emotionally. She said she hopes that all students who need tutoring can receive it and that she appreciates all the time and effort A&M students devote to helping area schoolchildren.
