students from voting, but I know for a fact that I turned in those cards personally. [The employee] would not let me leave until she checked them all."

Sandlin said she felt concerned about throwing the applications away, but did not take action until this semester when she was at a College Republican meeting and realized the significance of her mistake.

Sandlin said she and Jeremy Mollenkopf, a member of College Republicans and a sophomore business major, approached Turner about throwing the voter applications away.

Turner's office concluded that "the failure to deliver the 150 cards to the Voter Registrar was not done with the intent to deprive any person of their right to vote, but was rather the result of a mistake by volunteers who were trying to register students." No criminal charges will be filed.

Sandlin was impeached last weekend at the College Republicans meeting for throwing the voter registration applications away.

"They are trying to turn me into a scapegoat," Sandlin said, claiming that College Republicans are trying to lay all blame on Sandlin.

Rushing said the meeting last weekend was the first time he had heard about the applications being thrown away. To Rushing's knowledge, this was an isolated incident involving only Sandlin, he said.

"The confession was news to everyone in the College Republicans, and she has since been removed from both her position and the club," Rushing said. "If we find any more people in the club who are depriving people of the right to vote, we will remove them. We are from now on just going to have to be more careful about who to put in our positions."

Buddy Winn, Voter Registrar and Brazos County Tax Assessor-Collector, said he knew some voters were unable to vote but had no knowledge of Turner's investigation until Thursday.

"We had some complaints that were lodged at us to make us look like we were throwing votes away," Winn said. "But we don't care how people vote, we just care that they get to vote."

Winn, a Democrat, was re-elected to his post in the Nov. 7 election. He said there have been three or four previous occasions when his office was accused of trying to deny people the right to vote.

"My opponent's wife came down to our office after the election last fall and literally accused my people and my office of throwing votes away," Winn said. "In fact, she made two ladies who work for me cry."

Last fall, Winn deputized about 200 members of College Republicans to actively seek and register voters for the Nov. 7 election. Among the students who registered to vote with the student deputies were residents of the Callaway House, who later claimed to be victims of disenfranchisement when they were not allowed to vote.

Rushing said College Republicans deputies went to the Callaway House and registered residents.

Winn said with more than 200 student deputies, voter registration applications easily can be lost or misplaced. He suggests that, when students fill out their voter registration applications, they should get a receipt and keep it because his office will always accept the receipt.

expires, and we are hoping to have further information on at least two of the routes."

Johnson stressed that this is just a study and that it has not yet been decided whether the railroad will be moved.

"If they do recommend to move it, it's anybody's guess when it will be done," Johnson said.

The study of the alternative railroad paths has been budgeted to cost approximately $1.1 million. The majority of funding for the study came from federal and local appropriations. A&M, the Brazos County Commissioners Court, the city of College Station, the city of Bryan and Union Pacific railroad also helped fund the study.

CIS

and the University of California at Los Angeles charges 5 to 10 cents per page without any free-printing allocation.

Students using the West Campus Library computer lab have experienced a much shorter wait as a result of the printing charges.

"Last year, students frequently waited two or three hours for a print job," said Hugh Simmons, the West Campus Library computer lab supervisor. "The lab always had a crowd, and many students would go study elsewhere and come back. Now, it is rare for anyone to wait more than 20 minutes for a print job."

CIS has upgraded some of its equipment during the last year, using revenue from the Student Computer Access Fee, including the addition of 200 new Gateway computers to open-access labs.

"Our plan is to update and change the computers every three years," Spiller said. "We believe that no lab should ever contain computers past three years because we want to keep our facilities and services up to date. We're doing a great job of providing students and faculty quality resources."

To ensure A&M owns the latest technology, CIS has an advisory committee consisting of faculty, staff and students. The committee meets frequently to discuss new ideas.

CIS also conducts a survey every semester to acquire student feedback. The advisory committee reviews the surveys and makes any necessary changes.

"We have a suggestion box placed in all major access labs where anyone can give us their comments," Spiller said. "We take students' suggestions seriously and try to implement the ideas. We listen and then act."

Students can now create their own compact discs using the new CD burners placed in every major access lab. A&M has five major open-access computer labs, in addition to smaller labs in Corps Lounge D and Cain Hall.

"In a recent survey, students requested CD burners, and we responded quickly," Spiller said. "We are trying to find ways to inform students about the burners and provide instructions, so everyone can use them."

TRADITIONS

The Tradition, which will be able to house up to 795 students, markets itself as an attractive off-campus dormitory offering many of the amenities of an apartment complex, plus a food court and parking garage.

The Tradition offers furnished one-and-two bedroom apartments, each with one bathroom. Each apartment also comes with a microwave and refrigerator. Room rates are on a per-person basis and include utilities, extended basic cable and high-speed Internet service.

Other amenities offered by The Tradition are study rooms, a computer lab, on-site tutoring, television lounges, a theater and conference room, a prayer and meditation room, fitness center and a gated swimming pool.

Mandy Walker, marketing assistant for The Tradition, said these luxuries will make the private dorm an appealing alternative to on-campus residence halls.

"I think what's a real positive is they've taken the dorms and given you the dorm-style living but yet all the amenities to go with it," Walker said.

News in Brief

Council gives land to charity

The College Station Council donated Thursday the corner of Preston Street and Churchill Street to the Bryan-College Station Habitat for Humanity to build a house.

The property is in the neighborhood northeast the Barnes & Noble Texas Avenue.

"We're looking forward to the opening of the home," Mayor Lynn McIlhanna said.

Trish Burk, executive director of the Habitat for Humanity affiliate, said the house will be built for Nelson, a widow with two sons, will buy the home. Nelson works at College Station Elementary School.

Burk said Nelson's youngest son will play defense end for Midwestern State University in Wichita Falls this fall.

College Station student faculty and administrators raised $30,000 to sponsor the family, Burk said.

Students living in The Callaway House, an off-campus living community similar to The Tradition, the lifestyle offered by private dormitories and think The Tradition will be a success.

"I like living at The Callaway House because you get your own room, better food, good-looking, and you're close to the intramural fields," said Morgan Howard, Callaway House council president.

"But I would live at The Tradition next year because it's right next to campus and Northgate, and there's a lifestyle around the area."

Mark Wade, general manager of The Callaway House, said although The Callaway House may lose residents to The Tradition, he believes University Tower will lose more students because University Tower is an older building than the two new Callaway House.

"The Tradition will impact a number of people who will actually live in Callaway, but, in my opinion, think more people will move off-campus and University Tower than from Callaway," Wade said.

The manager from the University Tower was unavailable for comment Thursday night.
