Storms end funeral of Houston officer

HOUSTON (AP) — Funeral services for Houston police officer Alberto Vasquez, who was shot by a 19-year-old he was in the process of arresting on drug charges, were cut short Saturday when a tree fell less than 2 feet from the tent his family was sitting under.

"Ladies and gentlemen, we ask that you leave. You are putting yourselves at risk by staying," an officer said after lightning hit the tree and sent those nearby scrambling for safety.

But family members huddled even closer as rain continued to pummel the blue tent. Officers attending the funeral used their night sticks to relieve some of the water's weight and keep it from collapsing on Vasquez's flag-covered casket. A priest quickly blessed the casket, hugging Vasquez's widow, Patricia, who cried as she tightly grasped a picture of her slain husband.

Vasquez, a Houston police officer for seven years, and officer Enrique Duharte-Tur, were both shot while working security at a Houston apartment complex Tuesday night.

Police spokesman Robert Hurst said Alex Adams opened fire as the officers attempted to arrest him and four others on drug charges at the Natchez House Apartment Homes in southwest Houston.

Adams has been charged with Vasquez's death and attempted capital murder for wounding "Take a piece of my brother into your heart and use it everyday."

Duharte-Tur, who was shot twice in the chest.

Authorities say Vasquez and Duharte-Tur were leading three of the drug suspects to the apartment complex's leasing office while two other officers followed behind with Adams and another person when Adams pulled out a handgun and fired.

On Saturday, Duharte-Tur remained in serious condition at Ben Taub General Hospital.

Vasquez became the second law enforcement officer in Harris County to be killed in less than 16 hours Tuesday. Sheriff's deputy Joseph N. Dennis was gunned down as he tried to arrest Jesus Flores near his parent's northwest Harris County home for damage done to his sister's car.

Flores was arrested after a nine-hour manhunt and charged with capital murder.

Funeral services for Dennis took place on Friday with those in attendance remembering him as an unassuming man and a role model.

"Take a piece of my brother into your heart and use it everyday," Ben Dennis said of his brother.

During Vasquez's funeral, his mother, Ira Becker, asked that those in attendance not only remember her son, but also his friend, Duharte-Tur.

"He's got a family too," she said. "We already lost one. We don't want to lose another."

National Mall chosen for WW II memorial

WASHINGTON (AP) — In times of conscience, the still fields between the Washington Monument and Abe Lincoln's mighty chair have served as the nation's spiritual town square.

Change is coming to that historic sweep of the National Mall. It will be altered by the dream of thousands of World War II veterans. Soon, there will be a memorial to their effort at the heart of it.

A decade-long struggle was ended decisively by Congress last week with a vote to place the memorial plans outside the normal regulatory process, effectively overriding its resistance.

Veterans are dying, about 1,100 each day, President George W. Bush has noted. "It is time to give them the memorial they deserve."

Opponents argued that the mall should remain open and untouched, so that future generations can protest the government in the tradition of Martin Luther King. Some also described the memorial design as gaudy, or authoritarian.

The controversy, which has put some veterans on opposing sides, may endure as part of the memorial's legacy.

"It is time to put all of this in the past and do right by our honored dead and the veterans that are still with us," said Michael Conley, speaking for memorial planners. "It is almost unforgivable that we have no place in Washington that honors those who fought in a war that gave us our modern identity as a nation."

Back across the bow:

"We could have memorialized World War II in a place that would not have defaced the National Mall, which is a historic symbol of our nation's democracy," said 79-year-old World War II veteran George Peabody, who allied with the Coalition to Save Our Mall. "I will never feel good about this."

Peabody and other veterans who condemn the memorial also say the design has left them wanting.

The memorial seems to be the visual opposite of the Vietnam War Memorial. The monument, with its glass black walls and endless names of the dead etched in white, invites visitors to pause and consider their reflection even as they read. It is an apology.

The World War II memorial will be a place of gleaming waterfalls and glittering stars.

Built around the existing Rainbow Pool on the mall, it is to be a shallow stone crater that extends across 7.4 acres. On either side there are 43-foot tall concrete triumphal arches, one representing the victory in the Atlantic theater, the other, the Pacific.

Cradling the circle are 56 pillars; one for every state and territory at the time. At the heart of the memorial, fountains spray out of a pool of clear water. At the head, a wall of gleaming gold stars, one for every 1,000 American soldiers who died, stands between two waterfalls.

President Bush is expected to sign a law on Memorial Day allowing construction to begin soon on the National World War II Memorial. About the size of a football field, the memorial is to be placed on the National Mall between the Lincoln Memorial and the Washington Monument at a cost of about $160 million. It's expected to be finished in early 2004; when an estimated 3.8 million veterans of the war will still be alive.

one's who drink," he said. "But when you take a population that has a normal drinking rate and then include a very large additional population that, statistically speaking, has a higher drinking rate, anything that helps to stop people before they become a danger will be of great help."

University Police Department director Bob

Wiatt said the new law will help the police stop young drinkers before they ruin their lives. "It breaks my heart to see the numbers of individuals under 21 who drink and then do something that they end up regretting for the rest of their lives," he said. "People who we catch drinking while driving may not be drunk yet, but point is to stop them before the alcohol has a chance to set in and make them do something stupid."
