Prosecutors ask jury for death penalty in 1998 bombing trial

NEW YORK (AP) — Backed by testimony from grief-stricken relatives, federal prosecutors asked a jury Wednesday to condemn two men to death who were convicted of mass murder in the 1998 bombings of two U.S. embassies in Africa.

"Justice is not done yet," Assistant U.S. Attorney Patrick Fitzgerald told jurors. "Each of you will be convinced in the end that the only just punishment that does justice for the victims is the death penalty."

Sue Bartley — whose husband, the U.S. consul general in Nairobi, Kenya, and son were killed — later took the witness stand.

"There isn't a day that goes by that I don't think about my losses," Bartley said as family photos flashed across video screens positioned in front of the jury.

The testimony came on the first day of a penalty phase in the trial of Mohamed Rashed Daoud Al-Owhali, 24, of Saudi Arabia. A separate proceeding

— Sue Bartley, wife and mother of victims will follow for co-defendant Khalfan Khamis Mohamed, 27, of Tanzania.

Defense attorney David Baugh pointed at Al-Owhali and told jurors: "That young man will either be killed by you, or he will spend the rest of his life in prison in a country that is not his own."

On Tuesday, the same anonymous jury found the defendant and two other men guilty of plotting the Aug. 7, 1998 bombings in Nairobi and Dar es Salaam, Tanzania, killing 225 people, including 12 Americans. Prosecutors say the bombings were ordered by Osama bin Laden, the exiled Saudi millionaire and reputed leader of the Qaeda terrorist organization.

Only Al-Owhali and Mohamed could face the death penalty because of their involvement in the bombings. We're not sure if Al-Owhali rode in the bombing truck in Kenya, what Mohamed helped build in Tanzania.

No sentencing date has been set for co-defendants Wadi Hage, 40, of Arlington, Texas, and Mohamed Sadeek Omer, 36, of Jordan, who could live in prison.
