Woman killed during burglary investigation

MCKINNEY, Texas (AP) — Cathey Howard-Kalimah knew all about security. She taught it to aspiring security guards and police academy students at the North Texas Job Corps branch in this North Texas town.

That is why friends and neighbors remained baffled Wednesday as to how the 31-year-old mother of two could have been shot to death in her home Tuesday afternoon by a police officer's gun. Police said it accidentally discharged during a burglary investigation.

Friend and former colleague Rakelle Sanford said Howard-Kalimah would have known to be cautious when she came home Tuesday to check on a burglar alarm that had started going off that afternoon.

Sanford said she blames the police for what happened. "They definitely messed up," said Sanford, 26, who was at the family's home to drop off a card and flowers. "Cathey knew the security trade. She teaches it."

Police Chief Doug Kowalski said at a news conference Wednesday that the department is investigating the incident with the assistance of the Plano Police Department, Collin County Sheriff's Office and the Collin County Medical Examiner's Office. The case will be presented to a Collin County grand jury for review.

"This is going to be a fair, thorough, objective investigation," Kowalski said. "There is nothing to hide here." He has refused to release the name of the officer.

The shooting occurred after the officer walked around the outside of the house and saw the back door slightly open. As the officer attempted to go inside, the door apparently popped open, hit the officer's department-issued .40-caliber Glock handgun and caused it to fire, police said.

A single bullet went through the door, striking Howard-Kalimah in the chest. She died at the scene.

"It is a great tragedy," Kowalski said. "Words just fail me on administrative leave."

The officer has been on administrative leave for her three and a half years with the department, the officer received two letters of commendation, but also two letters of reprimand for two traffic accidents where she was at the wheel of her patrol car, Kowalski said.

Friends and neighbors said they were skeptical about the police's handling of the situation.

"A police officer was in the shooting and police officers are investigating it," Sanford said. "Hopefully, the truth will come out."

The family's attorney, Toddger Bridger, said he is asking him access to some information, including the statement on the incident. "I have all the details, but it's hard to know if the department was at fault."
