Clipped wings

MADD spreading message

DALLAS (AP) — Mothers Against Drunk Driving is spreading its message of underage abstinence in a teen-friendly way — using celebrities, rock videos and fast-paced movie clips.

The Irving-based organization on Thursday launched a multi-screen video program, called "Fake ID," to reach students struggling with peer pressure to drink alcohol.

The video will be offered to thousands of high schools this academic year. Also, Chevrolet has donated 10 Suburbans featuring the "Fake ID" logo to transport multimedia equipment to campuses across the country.

Hosted by Zachery Ty Bryan, who appeared on the television show "Home Improvement," the fast-paced presentation uses computer animation, special effects, music videos and clips from movies and TV to capture teens' attention.

Actress Rachael Leigh Cook and Miss Teen USA 2000 Jillian Parry also appear, along with families of teens killed in alcohol-related accidents.

Lindsey Shortridge, a junior from Haltom City, said she knows firsthand the devastation caused by drinking and driving. Her sister's husband was killed by a drunk driver last year.

"That made me not want to drink, knowing I could become someone," she said.

Shortridge and dozens of other teens watched a preview of the video Thursday at MADD's annual convention at the North Dallas hotel.

MADD president Mark Webb said the video encourages and congratulates teens to make the tough decision to refuse alcohol.

"This is peers talking to peers," she said.
