Sleep tight

Tired students find the best ways and places to sleep on campus

By JENNIFER CROSS
THE BATTALION

In any type of weather, students can be found catching a few minutes of sleep on campus. On warm sunny days, the grassy knolls of campus are dotted with dozing students. Even when the weather refuses to permit outdoor napping, students will seek refuge elsewhere.

The Sterling C. Evans Library Annex frequently is filled with nappers on fourth-floor couches. As for Evans Library itself, while not the most comfortable place to take a nap, a solitary sleeper can be found any weekday.

"It's been a long week," said Autumn Holcomb, a sophomore journalism major who prefers to sleep in the Memorial Student Center Flagroom. "I live off campus, so I need to sleep somewhere."

The Flagroom is a popular place to sleep. Some students like the occasional piano players, and some students, like Holcomb, enjoy the constant stream of people.

"I see a lot of my friends in here," Holcomb said.

The long couches in the exhibit hall become popular spots as exams force students to stay up late studying. The couches near the various theaters also are comfortable, unless there happens to be a performance going on.

On West Campus, the Horticulture-Forrest Science Building provides a soothing environment for troubled nappers. The lobby has an array of small fountains, next to padded benches. The fountains can be very soothing for students who have trouble sleeping without some noise.

Students seeking a quiet place to curl up can try the West Campus Library. The second and third floors have quiet areas where a pair of comfortable chairs can be pulled together for a fairly comfortable resting place. Often students in these quiet areas are frequently chatting on their cell phones, but loud snoring is generally frowned upon.

For the outdoors type, the A&M campus has a number of wide lawns on which students can sun and nap at the same time. The grassy strip between the Oceanography and Meteorology building and the Langford Architecture Center is wide enough to avoid the noise of daily foot traffic and high enough to be dry on most sunny days. The Quadrangle may get a little noisy for some, and students sleeping on the grass around the MSC risk bodily harm, but otherwise, just about any of the grassy areas on campus are good for a long nap on a sunny day. But is sleeping on campus good for students?

Dr. Andy Smith, associate director of counseling at the Student Counseling Service said, "If you're gonna nap, then you wanna maximize the possibility that you really will nap, rather than just lay there."

Students are recommended to find a place that is comfortable and similar to their normal sleeping environment. And while people have been known to feel great after a 10-minute nap, Smith said, "[Length] is real individual ... It varies quite a bit and depends on what's going on in your life."
