along the National Mall Thursday, Sept. 13, 2001. Reports of unidentified aircraft in Canadian airspace prompted the evacuation. Chris G. deputy director of the department's office of operations, employees.

Another U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said there were three unidentified aircraft over Canada and Canadian Air Force was tracking them, but added that the United States was not greatly concerned.

Making the rounds of a morning television program, Powell reinforced his Tuesday night pledge that attacks would be avenged. Administration officials pointed to suspected terrorist Osama bin Laden, but the secretary of state made it clear like no military response imminent.

He said the administration was "far from selecting any particular targets for retaliation." "We have to build a first," he said.

Congress convened prayers and expressions of resolve that the perpetrators would be found and punished. "The world should know members of both parties, both houses stand united this," said Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D.

Powell said Americans made the judgment: "We are at war and they want a comprehensive response. They want us to act as if we are at war and we going to do that — diplomatically and militarily."

The State Department, which closed after the attacks, opened again. Powell said one-quarter of U.S. embassies were closed as a precaution.

The U.S. air space, closed to commercial traffic for the first time, was expected to reopen at noon EDT, said Dorr, speaking for the FAA. He said it would take time for airlines to get back to normal schedules, with so many planes diverted to wrong locations.
