Dressed as a chicken, senior speech communications major Kim Snelson watches as a blur of runners pass by during the Delta Zeta Run to the Chicken. Almost 1,700 runners took to the streets of Northgate Saturday morning to raise money for the American Red Cross and the Houston Eye Research Foundation. The event was organized by the Delta Zeta Sorority.

Increased security was evident nationwide. The Coast Guard expanded armed defense of major ports Sunday and added special security zones around sensitive piers, waterways and other facilities in the agency's largest port defense operation since World War II.

Within hours of the first strikes by American and British warplanes, Missouri shut the doors at its state Capitol to visitors, Utah state troopers were shifted from their desks to the highways and airport officials in Chicago, Detroit, Kansas City and Florida further tightened security.

The Energy Department placed its facilities, including nuclear weapons laboratories and nuclear materials storage areas, on a heightened level of security, spokeswoman Jeanne Lopato said.

District of Columbia police closed off a main street in front of the State Department as a precaution. Americans overseas were warned of the possibility of "strong anti-American sentiment and retaliatory actions against U.S. citizens and interests throughout the world."

President Bush remained at the White House, working from the Oval Office and the first family's residential quarters. Vice President Dick Cheney was taken elsewhere, presumably so the two leaders would not be in the same place should disaster strike, but the White House would not say where.

"The current operating instructions are based on the possibility of additional terrorist activity occurring somewhere in the world," the FBI said.

Airport traffic was running normally, Marcia Adams, speaking for the Federal Aviation Administration. She said the FAA did not send any new directives to airlines or airports.

The Coast Guard ordered 24-hour armed surveillance at more than 300 U.S. ports, covering every major point of entry, spokesman Cmdr. McPherson said.

The agency increased from 51 to 72 the number of special security zones surrounding oil facilities as nuclear power plants and piers where oil is loaded and unloaded, McPherson said.

Together, the changes added up to the largest Coast Guard mobilization to defend U.S. ports more than 50 years, McPherson said.

"A lot of this is because of the USS Cole incident," McPherson said, referring to the attack on a Navy ship moored in Yemen last year that killed 17 sailors and injuring 37.

The changes followed an increase Thursday in the amount of notice that all ships must give to enter U.S. ports, McPherson said. Instead of 24 hours, ship captains must provide 96-hour notice and the Coast Guard then checks crew, passengers and cargo manifests. McPherson would not say the change was in preparation for Sunday's military strikes.

Since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, the Coast Guard has maintained separate naval protection zones around Navy and Coast Guard ships, a procedure that had not been used since World War II, McPherson said.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Accidental shooting death of 12-year-old goes to grand jury

HOUSTON (AP) — A grand jury will hear a case involving the accidental shooting death of a 12-year-old boy in Fort Bend County. The shooting occurred just before 5 p.m. Friday at the victim's home.

Police said the 12-year-old boy and his 10-year-old brother found a .25 caliber semiautomatic pistol in the bedroom of another brother. The victim was accidentally shot in the chest and taken to Memorial Hermann Hospital, where he later died.

The children's mother was the only other person inside the home at the time of the shooting, police said.

"She was cooking. She had no idea what was going on," said Houston police Sgt. H. L. Mayfield.

The pistol was discovered in the bedroom of an 18-year-old brother. He had apparently gotten the pistol from a non-family member, police said.
