came to safety, it was up to me and it was my plan and I didn't want to deviate from it. I want to do everything to make sure nothing went wrong."

In a three-way phone conversation on Sept. 28 between Marak, Colaco and Godbey, the men discussed Marak's problem with a current lack of student contact.

In April, CBM was on campus with planners in a series of open forums that led to 12 student-created Bonfire designs that have been incorporated into CBM's design options. Val Knowledge Systems Inc. was first selected in April as the safety firm that would work alongside CBM in planning Bonfire 2002.

Valen representatives were not on campus for the forums and in June, contract negotiations with the firm fell apart after they asked for more money. Originally, Valen was bargained for said Bonfire 2002 steering committee facilitator Bryan Godbey said. Godbey is a vice president for quality assurance leadership at A&M.

When planners turned to Marak, an expert in construction safety late this summer, a potential safety firm candidate there was no immediate opportunity for the firm to visit with students. Godbey said Marak would be briefed by members of the six Bonfire task forces which include student leaders as soon as contract negotiations were completed.

"It was not that we couldn't have any contact (with students), just that we wanted a design firm," Godbey said.

Godbey said Marak sought meetings with team leaders to represent the top tier of student leadership in the Bonfire 2002 student involvement plan. Leaders who will not be selected until a design is complete.

But Marak said he simply felt "a need to know the level of expertise" he would be dealing with before he could greenlight a plan that included training and safety manuals and oversight of the safety aspects of the final design.

"This is about you guys, and we wanted to get them (students) as involved as possible and keep them as involved as possible," Marak said. "The ultimate goal was to complete this task with everyone's safety in mind."

In his final email to Godbey and Colaco, Marak wished planners the best of luck and great Bonfire 2002."

Godbey said negotiations are already underway with another safety firm, whose name would not be released. The firm was on with Bonfire 2002 planners as a sub-contractor to CBM as soon as this week, he said.

Godbey and Colaco have a number of designs that the safety firm will help them narrow down to three finalists. As soon as those three designs are ready they will be posted for review on the Bonfire 2002 Website for student feedback. A decision on the final design is expected Oct. 15, Godbey said.

Once the Bonfire 2002 planning group selects a final design they will present it as a recommendation to University President Dr. Ray M. Bowen. When Bowen approves the design, plans for 2002 will continue.

ATTACKS

two apples on her hospital bed. Neighbors brought the 5-year-old to the hospital after Thursday's bombing raid killed her entire family. When she was better, Dr. Hashok Ullah said, hospital workers would send the girl to an orphanage.

Unsmiling and silent, Samina stared out at strangers Sunday from under a cap of head bandages.

"She just doesn't speak," Ullah said. "She hasn't spoken since she came in."

A father, Ahmanzai, lay in one bed hugging his wailing 1 1/2-year-old son, Azizullah — both of them, bandaged against burns and wounds from what villagers said was a second bombing run in the area of Karam on Saturday.

Female victims lay behind the locked door of the women's ward. Inside, doctors folded back one woman's enveloping black shawl to show her wound — a head injury, sustained in the same attack they said killed her two children Thursday.

At least 18 fresh graves were scattered about the village, marked with jagged pieces of gray slate. Two were tiny — freshly dug for what residents said were children. Villagers said more bodies were buried up in the mountains, taken there by residents as they fled the now mostly deserted community.

An old man knelt by one grave in the village, sobbing. He looked up, furiously, at journalists and their cameras and lobbed stones to drive the outsiders away.

One villager, Toray, stood by the ruins of his former home, its roof gone. He clutched a scrap of metal bearing the words "fin-guided missile" in English.

Toray, who uses only one name, said he lost his five children and his wife when the warplanes came. "I was asleep down there in the morning, when they bombed," he said, gesturing toward the base of the mountain.

Scratching his dust-caked beard, he looked toward his house and asked, "What do I have left? Nothing."

The United States launched its air campaign on Oct. 7 to root out bin Laden, the top suspect in the Sept. 11 terror attacks thought to have killed 5,600 people.

The Taliban insist there are no military bases near Karam. However, it is believed that bin Laden operated terrorist training camps here in Nangarhar province.

It was unclear whether any of the camps are in the Karam area or whether they were the intended targets of the attack.

ACCIDENT

Friday, and was attending a retreat Saturday. Friends expected Monge Ortega back sometime Sunday morning, said Max Aguirre, a senior agricultural economics major.

"He'd only been here a year, but everyone liked him," Aguirre said. "He enjoyed every moment of life."

Donald Castillo, also a senior agricultural economics major, had known Monge Ortega since living in Ecuador. Castillo said Monge Ortega joined the fraternity because he liked diversity and wanted to have good American friends.

Friends will hold a mass for Monge Ortega at 7 p.m. tonight at St. Mary's Church.

The Department of Public Safety (DPS) is investigating the accident.

FINDING THE TERRORIST ATTACKS DIFFICULT TO BELIEVE?

Who isn't? Feeling more uneasy than usual as you try to get back to your normal routine? Most of us are. Know someone who was deeply affected by the attacks? Many of us do. Experiencing past losses and anxieties again? Very common result of traumatic experiences, like the terrorist attacks.

What can you do? One of the most powerful things you can do is to talk about your feelings. Talking in a supportive environment has healing qualities.

The Student Counseling Service is offering a group for students who would like a supportive environment to talk about the way the terrorist attacks and its repercussions have affected their lives. Exploring Emotional Safety will be offered on Mondays from 1:30 to 3:00 p.m. and will be facilitated by Drs. Robert Carter and Nancy Stebbins. If you would like to participate in this group, call the SCS at 845-4427 or just show up on Monday, October 22nd at 1:30.

The SCS is located in Henderson Hall behind the All Faiths Chapel on campus.
