"Right now, the fraternity chapter is just trying to deal with the emotions and grief of losing two of its members," she said.

Greek Life Advisor Brian Tenclinger said weekend retreat activities can last into the night. Fraternity brothers typically talk about future plans around the campfire in retreats like Delta Tau Delta's, he said.

"It's not uncommon that they [retreats] go late into the evening," Tenclinger said. "In case, I'm not sure how much sleep was involved."

The A&M chapter of Delta Tau Delta posted remembrance in honor of Torres and Medina on its Website Monday.

"This is one of the most difficult situations most of us have ever encountered," the post read. "Yet, we have only just begun to mourn."

the past we pushed for the freshman issues," Medina said.

Medina said he is afraid that residence hall staff will not be able to get freshman involved in hall activities.

"It has already started to affect us this year," he said. "People who want to get active aren't. We're not sure if it's because of all the construction that people are wanting to stay on the inside."

Many people are unhappy by the prospect of moving out, Medina said.

"They like the environment here," he said.

Students have already begun to move, Medina said.

"It's a pain," said Maria Knight, a freshman psychology major, who has already relocated to Fowler Hall. "I have to get used to a whole new roommate and I was comfortable with my roommate."

Hughes and Keathely will reopen next fall.

championships.

"Cheerleading is one of the top-most competitive sports," Johnson said. "I am thoroughly happy with just competing."

Johnson said the squad hopes to place in national competitions.

"In any organization or situation there will always be someone who does not agree with you," Johnson said. "You cannot please everyone and if I tried I would end up defeating the purpose of the organization."

uplifting the Aggie spirit.

Johnson said she is aware that Aggies may resent the presence of a cheer squad on campus.

"People may not like us," she said, "but we will train harder than any other squad will have to and we will do well."

The squad is open to Blinn College students, and tryouts will be held each April. Johnson said that high school seniors will be able to try out prior to the freshmen year.

fisheries science major, said he was pleased with Southerland's decision.

"People were being told to take down their flags, and that's just not right," Bernard said. "This is the United States, and nobody should ever be told they can't fly the American flag."

RHA's decision upset many on-campus residents, who said the delegates failed to represent their constituents.

"If they put that resolution to a campus-wide vote, it would have passed overwhelmingly, but it has become a habit for delegates to act without regard to what their residents want," said Don Giannangeli, president of Dunn Hall and a sophomore nuclear engineering major. "[RHA delegates are] so concerned about not pissing anyone off that there's a tendency towards inaction, and that vote was pretty gutless."

Stephanie Hines, RHA vice president and a senior chemistry major, said she did not know if the RHA vote accurately reflected student opinion and said it was up to each delegate to gather student input from their respective halls on issues to be discussed at RHA meetings.

Bernard said he hoped the flag-display controversy would prompt students to be more attentive to campus affairs.

"If people feel they are not being represented well, they need to get involved and find out what's happening so they can hold their delegates accountable," Bernard said.

"Cheerleading is one of the top-most competitive sports. I am thoroughly happy with just competing."
