NEWS IN BRIEF

Voters to consider using debt to finance new roads

DALLAS (AP) — It isn't the Heimlich maneuver Texans need for their clogged roads. Proposition 15 could give the state the financial thrust it needs to fight traffic.

The proposition, already passed by the Legislature, needs voter approval because it changes the Texas Constitution by letting the state go into debt to fund road projects.

Currently, the state uses a pay-as-you-go system, building roads and paying with cash.

With voter approval on Nov. 6, the state could sell bonds to pay for more transportation projects sooner, helping construction catch up with the state's rapid growth, said Transportation Commissioner Ric Williams.

EPA approves smog-reduction plan for Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — Motorists soon will have to slow down on freeways as part of Houston's attempt to permanently shed the title of the nation's smog capital.

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) announced Monday its approval of the city's smog-reduction plan that includes reducing speed limits to 55 mph beginning next year. The speed limit now is as high as 70 mph in some parts of the city.

"Today we begin a methodical march forward — a march to a 30 percent reduction in pollution," said Texas Gov. Rick Perry at the EPA's approval of the plan, which was announced by Gregg Cook, the agency's regional administrator. "We're not there yet, but we are clearly on the right course. Some thought we could never even get this far."
