BONFIRE

The higher cost estimates reflect the need for professional engineers to develop new construction and safety measures, Bowen said, adding that fees for building and design plans could reach $500,000.

Before planning for Bonfire proceeds, the University must hire a safety firm. The first two firms considering the project backed out of negotiations, citing liability concerns and a lack of student involvement.

Negotiations are underway with another safety firm, said Bonfire 2002 Steering Committee facilitator Bryan Cole. A decision on the final design is expected Dec. 15, and Bowen is expected to decide in January whether Bonfire 2002 will burn.

"If students say this is not Bonfire, that's a reason to say 'no,'" Southerland told The Eagle. "If there's a scintilla of a notion there is a safety issue, that's a reason to say 'no.' There can be zero doubt."

ATTACKS

alliance seize Kabul until a broad-based government had been formed to take over from the Taliban.

Opposition groups were widely discredited in Afghanistan because of the chaos and infighting marked their four years in power. Fighting between groups now part of the alliance destroyed large sections of Kabul and killed an estimated 50,000 people, most them civilians.

Since the U.S.-led air campaign began Oct. 7, attacks against Taliban front line positions were mostly limited to strikes near the strategic northern city of Mazar-e-Sharif.

U.S. warplanes resumed attacks Sunday in that area striking targets in the provinces of Balkh, which includes Mazar-e-Sharif, and Samangan to the east of the city, according to the Afghan Islamic Press.

Taliban spokesman Mullah Amir Khan Mullah claimed Taliban forces drove back an opposition force in the area despite the U.S. airstrikes.

MPO will relocate

The Bryan-College Station Metropolitan Organization (MCO) will hold an open forum from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. to discuss possible relocation of the railroad running along Hillborn Road. "This is the first time being held on specifically targeted population," said Pearson, student chairman and a science major. "It's important for us to show up and express our opinions." Four main options are being considered by the MPO, three of which would involve moving the railroad from the A&M campus. The forum will be held at the Koldus 111.
