"It's hard to put in a cap because there were so many things," Hawthorne said. "I can't really put your finger on it."

Chandler worked to bring A&M's baseball program national attention and worked closely with former Aggie baseball player C.E. "Pat" Olson to upgrade the facilities.

Wally Groff, A&M athletic director, said the project received a generous donation from Olson but the field was Chandler's dream. Groff said Chandler worked to persuade the Board of Regents and others for an improved facility.

"Without Chandler, this wouldn't be here," Groff said. "He felt that we needed an Education Service facility if we were to be competitive with the University of Texas and on the national level." Groff said Chandler not only acted as a coach to the players but was a father figure.

"I always thought he was a great leader and turned our program into fine young men," Groff said.

Mark Johnson, an Aggie baseball coach, worked as an assistant to Chandler in 1981. Chandler's final season, Johnson set a record with 41 wins that year and advanced to the NCAA regionals.

"The baseball community from the major leagues to amateur baseball, lost a fine gentleman," Johnson said in a press release. "He had a passion for the game of baseball and for coaching. While teaching his players to be successful on the baseball diamond, he taught them to excel off the field as well. He had great warmth and heart for people. He could strike up a conversation with a stranger and that person would become a lifelong friend. All who were fortunate to meet him can't say away blessed and a better person for having known him."
