A&M, Bryan host secretary of state town hall meeting

19 constitutional amendments presented, discussed

By JONATHAN KOLMETZ
THE BATTALION

The cities of Bryan and College Station were two of six sites chosen to host electric town hall meetings on Wednesday morning. The live, interactive video conference was designed by the Texas secretary of state's office and discussed the 19 proposed constitutional amendments for the Nov. 6 general election. This was the first time Bryan and College Station were host cities for the teleconference.

"The electric town hall meetings began in August," said Monica Kennis, training specialist for Trans Texas Video Conference Network.

"Over 40 cities, including those today, have participated in the electric town hall meetings so far," said Elizabeth Hanshaw-Winn, the director of the legal elections division for the secretary of state. "And one more electric town hall is set up for next week that will include four more Texas cities."

Hanshaw-Winn said the electronic town hall format is an economical way to have people from the secretary of state's office meet and answer questions directly from cities all over Texas.

Kennis said the A&M System has helped organize the video conference in the past, but this was the first time there have been viewing locations open to the public on campus. Video cameras were set up in Scoates Hall, the Ocean and Meteorology Building, Harrington Education Center Classroom Building and the Blocker Building for students and faculty to watch and interact with the town hall meeting.

"There have been 567 proposed amendments to the Texas State Constitution and 390 ratifications," said Caroline Geppart, a staff attorney for the secretary of state's office.

Geppart said this is a large number when compared to the U.S. Constitution, which only has had 27 amendments.

During the meeting, Geppart and Hanshaw took turns reading each of the constitutional amendments to be considered in

The November elections, Geppart and Hanshaw-Winn then answered questions from the audience via the videoconferencing.

Although there were outlets on and off campus for students to watch the conference, student attendance at the town hall meeting was minimal. There were no questions or comments by any students regarding amendments following the presentation.

Also present at the town hall meeting was the League of Women Voters.

"There were about 10 women at each of the various sites hand out our Voter Guides," Betty Hill, president of Brazos Valley League of Women Voters.

"Our Voter Guides list the proposed amendments and argument for and against each proposed amendment," she said. Hill said that the Brazos Valley League of Women Voters has over 100 members, both male and female.

Hill said that the goal of the Brazos Valley League of Women Voters is to get information out about upcoming elections to help make the voter more educated on issues at hand. By passing as many Voter Guides as possible, Hill said they will reach their goal.

House approves legislation giving police new powers

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House approved legislation Wednesday to give police new search powers in response to last month's terrorist attacks, including the ability to secretly search homes, tap phones and track people's use of the Internet.

The Senate plans to move the measure on for President George W. Bush's signature before the end of the week.

But the new legislation is "not just limited to terrorism," said Rep. Robert Scott of D-Virginia.

The legislation expands the federal government's power to inspect educational records, wiretap telephones, track e-mails, seize mail and detain immigrants suspected of being terrorists.
