THE BATTALION

Monday, November 12

SENATE

The resolution passed 39-13 after a lengthy and heated debate in which opponents criticized the wording of the resolution as too strident and negative.

Jackman said the Bonfire resolution came to the floor a few days before it was voted on, short-circuiting the normal procedures for legislation and without the necessary approval of the Internal Affairs Committee.

"What we have here are rules violations and bad politics, and while we can't do anything about bad politics, I won't stand by and let [resolution supporters] undercut SGA by not following the rules," Jackman said.

Jack Long, speaker of the senate and a senior political science major, dismissed Jackman's complaint as an obstructionist tactic.

"We did everything by the book and followed the senate bylaws," Long said. "He's (Jackman) just upset."

Long said the bylaws do not require internal affairs, a group composed of senate officers, to formally vote to send a resolution to the floor. Long, who sponsored the resolution, said he received oral approval from committee members Kevin Capps and Daniel Pearson, who also agreed to co-sponsor the resolution. Including Long, the three comprise a majority of the committee.

Although the resolution was passed by an overwhelming majority, Jackman accused the Pro Traditions faction of ramming through an irresponsible piece of legislation.

"If you look at the caliber of people who voted against it, that says a lot," Jackman said. "It (the resolution) undercut all the hard work that students and administrators on the Bonfire committee are doing."

"I felt that at that point in the game they were starting to get in control of the game a little bit. I thought a lot of that was fatigue."

Petrucelli pointed to UT's four-overtime win over Missouri Friday as the reason for his team wearing down, but A&M head coach G. Guerrieri pointed out that his team was also weary following a tough game on Friday against Nebraska.

"There is not much difference between the two teams," Guerrieri said. "There was a lot of talent on the field out there and the difference in the end was the speed of our freshmen to be able to stretch them. When it comes down to any tournament game the winner is going to be decided by who is the most opportunistic and who puts the team under the most pressure."

A&M outshot UT, 18-13, but both teams kept the pressure on the opposing team's goalkeeper.

Johnson's goal was her second game-winner during the tournament. She scored a goal in overtime to lead the Aggies over Oklahoma, 1-0, in the first round on Thursday.

Johnson also set A&M's freshman record for goals in a season with 15.

With the win, A&M improves its all-time record to 13-0 over UT, including a 6-0 win in Austin earlier this season.

To get to the championship game, A&M had to do something that it had not done since its last Big 12 championship in 1997 — beat Nebraska.

In Friday's showdown between the only teams to ever win the Big 12 tournament, A&M came back twice to end an eight-game losing streak to the Huskers, 3-2.

Freshman forward Emma Smith scored the game-winning goal with about 17:00 left by dribbling past two defenders and firing a shot inside the right post.

Along with Smith's heroics, junior defender Jessica Martin also played a big role in the win.

Martin made several impressive defensive plays, including one that would have put Nebraska up 3-1.

On the play, A&M senior goalkeeper Angela Barker fell down stopping a Nebraska shot. The ball slowly toward the goal and went in, but Martin was able to stop the ball before it crossed the goal line.

Just minutes later, Martin evened the game to 1-1, putting in an assist from senior midfielder Andrea S.

Although Guerrieri called Martin "the defender in the Big 12" she was not named to any All-Big 12 teams.

"It would have been great to get that honor, but I want to prove it out to Martin said.

Martin was recognized as the Big 12 All-Tournament Team, along with junior sophomore defender Andrea S. Dillard and senior forward Nicky Thrasher, giving four of the 12 spots of the Cornhusker junior defender Kori Saunders and defending Big 12 champion up 1-0 in the first half.

A&M's Thrasher had a score at 1-1, with only the half. Thrasher's ball from Nebraska goalkeeper Erin Miller and into the net.

The Aggies find out awaits them in the NCAA tournament today at 2 p.m.

can significantly increase energy efficiency.

Also, Sippial said, the University is now pre-purchasing a large portion of its natural gas, which has saved more than $1 million.

The Committee on Energy Conservation plans to expand these energy initiatives, Bryant said, by asking energy users to do their part.

"Having the students and faculty turn off their lights and computers when they leave their offices or dorm rooms is a really simple thing that can save a considerable amount of money," Bryant said.

Sippial said the University hopes to spend an additional $500,000 on energy this year as a result of additional conservation efforts.

Bryant said the key to conservation is educating those on campus as to how much money the school is losing when lights are on or when offices are over-cooled.

"Many students think, 'I don't pay for the electricity so why not leave the lights on?'" Bryant said. "But they are losing money which could be used other ways to aid the
