KABUL

Abdullah, invited all Afghan factions — except the Taliban — to come to Kabul to negotiate on the country's future. The top U.N. envoy for Afghanistan outlined a plan for a two-year transitional government with a multinational security force.

Abdullah's words were reiterated by Burhanuddin Rabbani, the alliance leader and Afghanistan's deposed president, who also said he expected to return to Kabul on Wednesday.

"There is no room for the Taliban" in any political settlement in Afghanistan, Rabbani told Qatari-based Al-Jazeera television.

In Washington, President Bush said the United States was working with the alliance to ensure they "respect the human rights of the people they are liberating" and recognize "that a future government must include a representative from all of Afghanistan."

Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld said a "small number" of U.S. troops were in Kabul, advising the alliance. He told journalists at the Pentagon that the troops were not enough to police the city or prevent retaliation by the opposition.

Bush said there was "great progress" in the campaign launched Oct. 7 to uproot al-Qaida and punish the Taliban for harboring bin Laden, the chief suspect in the September terror attacks on the United States.

In the streets of Kabul, thousands of people celebrated, honking car horns and ringing bicycle bells. They flouted the strict version of Islamic law imposed by the Taliban that regulated almost every aspect of life, down to banning shaving and music.

"I used to play this at home, but very quietly and then I would check to see if anyone was outside," Abdul Rehman said as he turned up the volume on his cassette tape recorder blaring out the music of his favorite Afghan folk singer.

Zul Gai, the owner of a barber shop lined up with men looking to lose their beards, smiled broadly. "This has been my best business day in many long years," he said.

Most women, however, were too cautious to shed their all-encompassing burqas, unsure what the new rules would be.

Hundreds of northern alliance troops hunted down lingering Taliban and foreigners who came to Afghanistan to join al-Qaida. At least 11 Arabs and Pakistanis were slain and their bodies mutilated.

Alliance fighters roamed the streets in taxis, pickup trucks and cars, brandishing Kalashnikov rifles and grenade launchers. Troops set up roadblocks in neighborhoods where Arabs and Pakistanis lived.

Five Pakistanis, who were firing randomly from trees in a public park, were killed by alliance soldiers. A Red Cross official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the bodies were in pieces when volunteers removed them for burial.

Four Arabs died when their pickup truck was blasted by a rocket. Their charred bodies were dragged from their vehicle by residents who kicked and poked at them. Two other Arabs were killed outside a military base near the U.N. guest house.

As they fled Kabul, the Taliban took with them two Americans and six other foreign aid workers jailed since August for allegedly preaching Christianity in Muslim Afghanistan. They were reportedly taken to the southern city of Kandahar.

There were signs of a breakdown of Taliban control in Kandahar — the birthplace of the hardline Islamic movement.

A U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said an armed force of Pashtuns were moving against the Taliban near Kandahar. The official would not elaborate.

At least 200 Pashtun fighters mutinied in Kandahar, and fighting broke out by the city's airport, said a Taliban official, Mullah Najibullah, at the Pakistani border at Chaman.

Abdullah said the situation in Kandahar was "chaotic." He said "Taliban authorities are not seen. ... There is no responsible authority to respond to the needs of the people."

grateful to doctors who were treating him for anthrax before it was confirmed.

Four others have died of the disease, including two postal workers remembered Tuesday at a Postal Service memorial.

No new cases of anthrax infection have been reported for more than two weeks, though traces of the bacteria have continued to turn up in eight mailrooms at Harvard University in Washington, closed after spores were detected following a weekend anthrax was detected in congressional offices.

There was more concern after anthrax was detected in eight spots in the Department's Sterling mail facility. Six of them were on a single automated sorter, suggesting that a containing a substantial amount of anthrax passed through the facility. Boucher said Tuesday.

The only other possibility was in our post office. Both the A&M of Tom Daschle and became contaminated.

POTTER

ever, some are still skeptical about the justice it will bring to the book version.

"I was worried when the first said they were making the movie because the last was so good," Palmer said. "Movies just always have a way of messing up the idea of a book."

The screen version of Rowling's Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone runs just more than two and a half hours and stars Harry Radcliffe as Harry Potter, Rupert Grint and Emma Watson as Ron Weasley and Hermione Granger.
